

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

Int 2155.1.2

Bound
APR 27 1900

Harvard College Library

FROM THE REQUEST OF

CHARLES SUMNER, LL.D., OF BOSTON.

(Class of 1830.)

"For Books relating to Politics and Fine Arts."

12 Sept. 1884.

THE
LAW OF NATIONS CONSIDERED AS INDEPENDENT POLITICAL COMMUNITIES.

London

HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE

AMEN CORNER

THE
LAW OF NATIONS CONSIDERED AS
INDEPENDENT POLITICAL COMMUNITIES.

ON THE RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF NATIONS IN TIME OF PEACE.

BY SIR TRAVERS TWISS, D.C.L., F.R.S.

MEMBER OF THE INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL LAW, AND ONE OF HER MAJESTY'S COUNSEL.

A NEW EDITION, REVISED AND ENLARGED.

OXFORD:
AT THE CLARENDON PRESS.
SOLD BY LONGMANS, GREEN, AND CO., 39, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON; AND BY HENRY FROWDE,
OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, LONDON.

1884.

[The right of translation and all other rights reserved.]

47 ^{15/2} ~~3602~~

Int 2155.1.2

HARVARD COLLEGE LIBRARY

1884. Sept. 12,

Summer Fund.

PREFACE

TO THE SECOND EDITION.

THE object, which the author has had in view in undertaking to treat of the Law of Nations, has been to present to the student of that branch of International Law, which is conversant with the Rights and Duties of Nations as Independent Political Communities, a systematic outline of the existing rules of international conduct, by which the harmony of the National State-System of Christendom is maintained, and to the advantages of which the Ottoman Empire was admitted by the Treaty of Paris (1856). The author makes no pretension to discuss any theories of International Ethics, as furnishing rules, by which the intercourse of independent States ought to be guided. He has been content to examine into the existing usages of State-Life, and to illustrate the modifications and improvements which they have undergone from time to time, whereby they have been adjusted to the growing wants of a progressive civilisation. Further he has taken occasion, where the subject-matter has permitted him, to analyse those usages, with a view to discover whether a given rule has been the result of an application of some principle of Right (Jus) to international relations, or is merely the offspring of an instinctive appreciation on the part of independent political bodies of what is necessary for their existence, or is conducive to their mutual well-being.

The disappearance of small States from the National State-System of Europe, and more particularly of the minor Germanic States, which were recognised as members of the Family of Nations for the first time at the Peace of Westphalia, constitutes a most remarkable feature of change in the political map of Central Europe, as it was adjusted at the Congress of Vienna (1815) in accordance with what was then regarded as a consensus gentium. Since that Congress the States of Europe have been insensibly led to subordinate, by means of International Conferences, their particular interests to the general welfare of the European Community of States; so much so, that the present Age has been designated "the Age of Congresses," and certain writers have maintained that a consciousness of duty on the part of individual States towards the Community of States is a peculiar growth of the present century, and deserves to be noted as its distinctive characteristic. Whatever justice there may be in this view, it deserves remark, that the constitution of a New Germanic Empire and the unification of Italy have been accomplished without a Congress. On the other hand, changes in Eastern Europe, apparently not of so great importance as regards the European equilibrium, but nevertheless tending to the dismemberment of the Ottoman Empire, which was brought into alliance with Christendom for the first time by King Francis I. of France in the early part of the sixteenth century with a view to establish an European equilibrium against the Emperor Charles V., have been held to require the sanction of a Congress. The explanation may be sought for in the circumstance that the independence of the new Kingdoms of the Lower Danube required international recognition, to say nothing of the fact that the fortune of war had entailed upon the Ottoman Porte the necessity of ceding to Russia certain districts on the Southern bank of the Danube, in exchange for which Roumania had to cede back to Russia certain portions of Bessarabia, which had been detached from Russia under the provisions of the Treaty of Paris (1856). The ink of this latter Treaty had not so entirely faded away as the ink of the Treaty of Vienna (1815), besides the ink of the First Protocol of the Conferences of London (1871) was still fresh, under which it had been solemnly declared to be an essential principle of the Law of Nations, that no Power can free itself from the obligations of a Treaty or modify its stipulations without the consent of the contracting parties by means of an amicable understanding. The various changes, which have taken place in the political organisation of the European State-System, and which may be said to have revolutionised the settlement of Vienna (1815), have been fully noticed in the three Chapters on the National State-Systems of Christendom, the Ottoman Empire, and the Kingdoms of the Lower Danube.

It is difficult to determine with precision the degree in which Egypt may be considered to have been brought within the sphere of the Public Law of Europe by the admission of the Sublime Porte to the advantages of that Law and of the European Concert. Qui sentit beneficium, sentire debet et onus is a maxim applicable to States equally as to individual persons; and if Egypt is supposed to be entitled to the benefits of the Concert of civilised Europe she must be content to share its obligations. The growth of the Khedivate has been detailed in the Chapter on the Ottoman Empire, but a very cursory allusion has been made to the Suez Canal, as according to its original Statutes the Canal was, strictly speaking, a commercial enterprise, and its traffic was to be confined to merchant vessels to the exclusion of ships of war and naval transports; but it is obvious that the opening of a continuous water-way between the Red Sea and the Mediterranean, and the recent admission of ships of war to its navigation, have altered materially the character of what has been termed the Eastern Question. The project which the genius of Leibnitz first suggested to King Louis XIV. of France for effecting the conquest of Egypt, and for converting the Mediterranean Sea into a French Lake, with a view to counterbalance the preponderance of the House of Austria, has become eliminated from the category of practical politics by the opening of a maritime canal across the Isthmus, and by the fact of the Mediterranean Sea having thereby been made the highway of international commerce between Europe and the far East.

This result may give rise to juridical questions of novelty, which may require to be ultimately settled by a Congress, seeing that the principle, upon which the tariff of the Suez Canal had to be settled, has already been the subject of an European Congress under the presidency of the Sublime Porte. A more serious consequence, however, of the opening of the Canal will probably be found in the immediate friction that it will create between the Christian States of Europe and the uncivilised tribes of Islam, which occupy both shores of the Red Sea, the strain of which may jeopardise the general relations of amity between Christendom and the Mahommedan world, more especially if the successful revolt of the Soudanese, under the leadership of the Mahdi, should produce a schism in the Kaliphate. In consideration of these and other circumstances, which have brought the Ottoman Empire into direct relations with the various States of Christendom, the author has thought it useful to append a Chapter on the Capitulations of the Ottoman Porte. He has not, however, entered into any exposition of the details of those Capitulations, inasmuch as the details belong to a branch of International Law, which is beyond the scope of the present work. It may be useful also for the student to bear in mind that the Ottoman Porte in becoming a party to Article LXII. of the Treaty of Berlin (1878) has shown an increasing willingness on its part to adjust its civil institutions to the general European standard, at the same time that it has undertaken specific obligations in addition to the general obligation, which it has incurred under the Treaty of Paris (1856).

Another question in connection with Africa has already assumed a prominent place inter apices juris Gentium, if I may so say, namely the capacity of private associations of a philanthropic character to accept cessions of territory with full rights of dominion from the native chiefs of Africa, so as to acquire for any settlements which they may establish in such ceded territory a Status, which in due course of time will warrant on the part of the nations of Christendom a recognition of such settlements as independent States. It is not disputed that Chartered Companies established for purposes of commerce are capable of acquiring an international status in cases where they have obtained cessions of territory with full rights of dominion from native chiefs. Examples which illustrate this position of Public Law in reference to Asia and America are too numerous to require citation. They abound in the far East, where chartered companies have been the pioneers of European civilisation; whilst on the shores of the Northern Continent of the Western Hemisphere voluntary associations of emigrants are found to have settled there, and to have acquired full rights of dominion by the side of chartered companies. In Africa, on the other hand, cases of voluntary associations establishing settlements on the coast are rare, and as long as the slave trade was the staple trade of the Western Coast, such settlements would have been out of place. It need not, therefore, excite any surprise that, until the African slave trade had been placed under an international ban by the Congress of Vienna (1815), no private association should have ventured to form a settlement on the West Coast of Africa. In the year, however, immediately following the Congress of Vienna, namely in 1816, a private association of philanthropists was formed at Washington in the United States, under the title of "the American Colonisation Society for the establishment of free men of colour of the United States." After several failures this Association obtained in 1821 the cession of a considerable tract of territory, on the Pepper Coast of Upper Guinea, with full rights of dominion from the native chiefs. The Association thereupon established within their newly acquired territory a community of emancipated slaves, as the nucleus of a future State, which was supplied with ample funds for the maintenance of an orderly government under the direction of its founders down to the year 1839. In that year, or about that year, it would appear that an objection was raised on the part of one of the European Powers to the right of the Administrative Council of the Settlement to levy custom dues on foreign merchants trading with the Settlement, whereupon the Settlement, with the consent of the Association at Washington, declared itself to be an Independent State under the title of the Commonwealth of Liberia, and subsequently, in the year 1847, assumed the title of the Republic of Liberia. Its independence has since been recognised by the leading States of Europe and America, including Portugal, with which power the Republic of Liberia concluded a treaty on the 4th of March, 1865, in which it was declared that by the laws of Portugal and of the Republic of Liberia the slave trade is assimilated to the crime of Piracy. Since Liberia has declared itself to be an independent republic, an adjoining settlement, which had been formed under similar circumstances, and was named Maryland, has made overtures to unite itself to Liberia, and those overtures are still under consideration. Meanwhile the Republic of Liberia has under its dominion an area of nearly 9,600 square miles with a population of about 18,000 civilised, and 1,000,000 aboriginal negroes. The political constitution of the Republic of Liberia, as settled in 1847, has been printed in the British and Foreign State Papers, vol. 35, p. 1301.

The first foreign recognition of the independence of the Republic came from Great Britain in 1848, when Lord Palmerston was Minister of Foreign Affairs, at which time President Roberts, of Liberia, came over to London from Monrovia, the capital of the Republic, to negotiate a treaty with England, and returned afterwards to Monrovia, where he ratified it as President¹. As far, therefore, as precedents are concerned two instances may be cited within a comparatively recent time, which tend to shew that the juridical difficulty, which has been suggested to be in the way of private associations forming settlements in Africa, and acquiring for their settlements full rights of dominion—the right of Empire over the territory ceded to them—is without foundation. The question has recently become one of practical interest in regard to the settlements established within the last few years in Central Africa, on the banks of the Upper Congo, by a philanthropic association, which has its head-quarters at Brussels under the title of L'Association Africaine Internationale. The analogy of its proceedings to those of the Washington Association is striking. In the first place the Washington Association had no mandate from the Government of the United States, and for good reason, because the Slave States of the Union possessed a political preponderance in 1816. In the second place, Liberia was founded to promote the emancipation of the negro slave, whilst Leopoldville, which may be regarded at present as the head settlement of the Brussels Association, has been founded to combat the slave trade. In the third place, Liberia remained for a quarter of a century or longer under the immediate direction of its founders, and was assisted from time to time with grants of money from their treasury. In like manner the various settlements of the African International Association are still subsidised by grants from the Association, and will continue to receive such support until their resources will warrant them in declining it. There is, however, a feature in the system of the Brussels Association, which distinguishes it from that of Washington. It exercises no political control over its settlements on the Upper Congo further than that it has taken measures to secure that the frontiers of its settlements shall be open freely to the commerce of all the world, and that any stranger who may wish to establish himself at any of its stations shall be welcome to the same rights and privileges, to which the original settlers are entitled, on the sole condition of obeying its laws.

¹ The author made the acquaintance of President Roberts, as he passed through Paris, having met him at dinner at the house of M. Drouyn de Lhuys.

To enter further into a discussion of the difficulties which are supposed to beset the Congo Question, would be to travel into details, the full discussion of which would require a special treatise. The object of the author has been simply to elucidate a Question of Public Law respecting which there seems to be some confusion of thought amongst publicists, who have been embarrassed by the popular use of the term "Sovereignty" in works on International Law, where the term "full dominion" would have been more appropriate. The Roman jurists did not draw the distinction between the "dominium supremum" and the "dominium directum," which was adopted by the Feudalist School, who used the former term to denote "the Right of Empire," otherwise the Right retained by the Supreme Prince, who had devolved the "dominium directum" on the vassals of his Empire, when he granted to them portions of his territory. Hence the word "dominium," which the Roman jurists used to signify "ownership," has come down to our time with an uncertain meaning, imparted to it by mediæval usage, and since feudal tenures have been abolished, the "dominium directum" has been merged as it were amongst the rights of property, whilst the "dominium eminens" of the Supreme Prince has been designated "Sovereignty," which has insensibly come to signify a personal relation between a Prince and his subjects, and not a juridical incident of territorial possession. The author has himself employed the term "dominion" as signifying something distinct from that of "empire" (p. 230) in accordance with the terminology of Grotius (lib. 11, ch. 3, § 4, 2). International Law is obliged to be content with the lot of a younger brother, and is perplexed sometimes by the divergence between Roman Law and Feudal Law in the employment of words, to which Roman Law by right of primogeniture has affixed a scientific meaning, against which Feudal Law has not been disposed to rebel overtly, but with which it has tampered, and has transmitted them to us in a debased condition, which it is not within the power of every student to detect. The term "Sovereignty," however, ought not to cause any embarrassment to the student of the Congo Question. The Republic of Venice, at the time when it acquired rights of Empire over the Morea, and over most of the islands of the Ægean and the Levantine Seas, acknowledged no personal Sovereign. The Republic of France, which is acquiring rights of Empire in the present day over extensive territories in Western Africa, acknowledges no personal Sovereign. It is the autonomy of a State which is the criterion of its independence, not the circumstance of its being ruled by a Sovereign Prince; and it is a lingering tradition of a past age, which suggests that none but Sovereign Princes or associations chartered by them can found settlements out of Europe, which will be entitled to claim international recognition, when they are sufficiently matured to maintain the character and to discharge the duties of independent states. That the rights of dominion in the sense of the "dominium emimens," as distinct from the rights of property, are capable of being acquired by private associations of a philanthropic character in Africa is, we think, established by the two instances of Liberia and Maryland, which we have cited, and the former of which has been recognised as a Member of the Family of Nations, not indeed by an European Congress, but after the example of the United States of America itself by a Catena, so to say, of separate treaties with the leading states of the civilised world.

TRAVERS TWISS.

TEMPLE, LONDON,
April 16, 1884.

INTRODUCTION

TO THE SECOND EDITION.

IT was an apt remark on the part of his Excellency Kuo-Taj-in, the first Envoy-Extraordinary and Minister-Plenipotentiary accredited from China to the Court of St. James, that he found the European Law of Nations to be "a very young Law;" but he had also observed that since the age of Grotius wars had been less frequent in Europe, and less sanguinary. No higher compliment could well be paid to the writings of the great Dutch Jurist, than to attribute to them as a consequence what the discernment of his Excellency the Chinese Minister had noted as a remarkable coincidence, without perhaps being aware that the Treatise of Grotius on the Right of War and of Peace contributed in a marked degree to pave the way for the conclusion of the Peace of Westphalia. That event may be said to have laid the foundation of a new European State-System, by grouping for the first time together the States of Central Europe after the fashion of a family, the members of which were acknowledged to be independent, and, although of unequal power, were recognised as possessing an equality of Right. The realisation of such a State-System would have been impracticable if Grotius had not previously familiarised the minds of Statesmen with the conception of territorial sovereignty and the rights of independence as incidental to such sovereignty, and further with the doctrine of the equality of States considered as independent political communities. These two principles were at the basis of the new Germanic Empire as constituted by the Peace of Westphalia, whilst the Treaties of Munster and of Osnaburg supplied the groundwork of an European Concert to maintain those principles.

There is a saying that right is the outcome of war, "la guerre enfante le droit." Perhaps it would be a less questionable paradox to say that wars give occasion for declarations of international right, precisely as civil tumults give occasion for the enactment of municipal laws. In accordance with such a maxim the Thirty Years' War may be said to have afforded to Grotius an opportunity, under the modest pretext of discussing the rights of war and of peace, for teaching mankind that there was a law distinct from the Law of Nature, which had been tacitly acted upon and generally received by all or by most nations, and which was for the advantage, not of any one nation in particular, but of all in general. To this law Grotius gave, for the first time, the name of "the Law of Nations," by way of distinction from "the Law of Nature," not as intending to deny the application of the great principles of natural law to the relations between Commonwealths, but wishing to reduce into a system the rules of intercourse, which were practised between Nations, instead of leaving the entire fabric to rest on general principles, the application of which might be maintained or denied by each Nation in its transactions with its neighbours, according as it suited its convenience, or as the occasion might seem to warrant.

"I have employed," he says, "by way of evidence of the existence of this law, the testimonies of philosophers, historians and poets, and, in the last place, of orators, not that implicit credit is to be given to them, for it is usual for them to serve their party, or their subject, or their cause, but because when many persons at different times and in different places affirm the same thing for certain, that circumstance ought to be ascribed to some general cause, which, in the questions treated by us, cannot be any other than a correct inference from natural principles, or an universal consent. The former of these indicates the Law of Nature, the latter the Law of Nations, the difference between which must not be judged of from the language of their testimonies, for writers everywhere confound the terms 'Law of Nature' and 'Law of Nations,' but from the quality of the subject-matter, for whatever cannot be deduced by clear reasoning from certain principles, and yet appears to be everywhere observed, must have had its origin in the free consent of all." (Prolegomena, § 41.)

The treatise "De Jure Belli et Pacis" experienced much opposition during the lifetime of its author, and there have not been wanting, in England as well as on the continent of Europe, critics who have objected to the method of Grotius as well as to his doctrine, maintaining that the maxims which he inculcated as founded on the equality of nations went to destroy the three cardinal principles of the Civil Law, often quoted as "the Ulpianic precepts," to wit, "Honeste vivere, Alterum non lædere, Suum cuique tribuere;" further, that the doctrine of a Law of Nations, resting on the common agreement of mankind, was an empty fiction, to which nothing in fact really corresponds. But it was never intended by Grotius to set up a rule like that which theologians have termed the Golden Rule of Vincentius Lirinensis, "Quod semper et ubique et ab omnibus." The words of Grotius are,—“There are two ways of investigating the Law of Nations. We ascertain this Law, either by arguing from the nature and circumstances of mankind, or by observing what is generally approved by all Nations, or at least by all civilized Nations. The former is the more certain of the two, but the latter will lead us, if not with certainty, yet with a high degree of probability, to the knowledge of this Law; for such an universal approbation must arise from some universal principle, and this principle can be nothing else than the common sense or reason of mankind.” (L. I. ch. i. § 3.)

With regard to the method of Grotius, which is for the most part inductive, and perhaps somewhat disorderly, the nature of the subject demanded at his hands that he should frequently cite examples from the history of mankind, to illustrate and support his application of general principles of law and politics, whilst an entire separation of the principles of natural law from those of ethical science would not have been very feasible, perhaps not altogether desirable for his purpose. The best answer, however, to those who condemn his work as having no definite stamp or character, is found in the fact that it was received as an authority by learned Professors in the Protestant Universities of the Continent within thirty or forty years after its first publication, whilst the universal assent of the civilized world to its teaching, with the exception always of Rome, the buttress of the system which the Thirty Years' War had shattered, affords a solid proof of the reality of the truths which Grotius proclaimed, and of his method of expounding those truths being well suited to the age in which he lived.

The Treatise of Grotius was first published at Paris in 1625. Its full title was "Hugonis Grotii de Jure Belli et Pacis, libri tres, in quibus Jus Naturæ et Gentium, item Juris Publici præcipua explicantur." A quarter of a century had hardly elapsed before, in the same country which had produced Selden's "Mare Clausum," in objection to the "Mare Liberum" of Grotius, a treatise appeared in support of the more important work of the great Dutch Jurist, entitled "Juris et Judicii Fædalis, sive Juris inter Gentes et Quæstionum de eodem explicatio." Its author was Dr. Richard Zouch, who had been appointed Regius Professor of Civil Law in the University of Oxford by King James I, and Judge of the High Court of Admiralty by King Charles I. Although he did not approve the Solemn League and Covenant, Dr. Zouch did not object to continue to hold several high appointments under the Commonwealth. He was eminently distinguished for his knowledge of the Roman Civil Law as well as of International Law, in both of which branches of law his writings were in high estimation, and recommended him to the Protector Cromwell as a very fit person to sit amongst the Delegates appointed to try Don Pantaleon Sa, who having, with the aid of his servant, deliberately killed a British subject, one Greenaway of Lincoln's Inn, on the new Exchange in London, had taken refuge in the hotel of his brother, the Portuguese Ambassador at the Court of St. James¹. The language of Dr. Zouch in dividing the Law which regulates the relations of princes or states with one another into natural and positive law, is free from all ambiguity. "When many persons," he says, "affirm the same thing at different times, that fact ought to be referred to some universal cause, which cannot be any other than a right conclusion drawn from the principles of nature, or a general consent, of which the former indicates the Law of Nature, the latter the Law of Nations." Thus far the doctrine of Dr. Zouch is in complete harmony with that of Grotius, but he could not overlook the fact that there was growing up, outside the circuit of the unwritten Law of Nations, founded on general custom ("inveterata consuetudo") a body of written law contained in treaties and conventions, which could not well be overlooked in a treatise professing to treat of the "Jus inter Gentes," whether those treaties were intended to supplement the defects in the unwritten or common law, or whether they were intended to modify it and to accommodate it to the progress of civilisation. To this branch of law he assigned the title of positive, as distinguished from natural law. "Deinde," he says, "præter mores communes pro jure etiam inter gentes habendum est, in quod gentes singulæ cum singulis consentiunt, utpote per pacta, conventiones et fœdera." In other words, the "Jus inter Gentes" of Dr. Zouch is a more comprehensive body of rules of intercourse between nations than the "Jus Gentium" of Grotius. The Law between Nations, as treated by Dr. Zouch, comprises both the unwritten law, founded on general custom, and a written law, ancillary or exceptional to the unwritten law, founded on treaties and conventions. It is not, however, every treaty which marks a stage of development or progress in the Public Law of Europe. Some treaties are merely declaratory of a rule of the unwritten law, which risks to be forgotten, others are simply exceptions to the general rule, but the majority of treaties indicate, as it were, the set of the current of public opinion as to what all nations would do well to agree to observe.

¹ A dispute having arisen between the Protector Oliver Cromwell and the Portuguese Government, in consequence of the brother of the Portuguese Ambassador having been tried and executed for the murder of Greenaway, Dr. Zouch published a treatise entitled, "De Legati delinquentis Judice competente Dissertatio," which was printed at Oxford, according to the title-page, "Oxonise. Excudebat Hen. Hall, Academiæ Typographus, Impensis Tho. Robinson, 1657." A copy of this treatise is in the Author's possession, on the fly-leaf of which, before the title-page, are inscribed at the top the words, "Reade ex dono authoris," and beneath them, in a more modern hand, the following memorandum: "In 'The Memoirs of the Protectoral House of Cromwell,' by Mark Noble, vol. ii, p. 52, it is said that 'Colonel John Gerard was beheaded for having engaged with others his relatives in a plot to assassinate Oliver Cromwell. It is singular the brother of the Portuguese Ambassador died the same day for killing a gentleman, whom he mistook for this Colonel.' " Reade, to whom the duodecimo volume was presented by Dr. Zouch, was probably Thomas Reade, Fellow of New College, Oxford, and Principal of Magdalen Hall and a Doctor of Laws of the College of Advocates. Dr. Zouch was also a Fellow of New College and Principal of Alban Hall, Oxford, and likewise a Doctor of the College of Advocates. His name is sometimes spelt with a final "e," which accounts for his being termed in Latin "Zouchæus."

Dr. Zouch's work was published in 1650. Within a quarter of a century after that event Professor Rachel, of the University of Kiel, a diplomatist of note, who took part, as the Envoy of the Duke of Holstein Gottorp, in the Congress of Nimeguen, published two Dissertations, "De Jure Naturæ et Gentium," in which he formally distinguished Conventional Law from Customary Law, and assigned to the former division the title of "Jus Pactitium." Puffendorf, who had from the commencement combated the distinction which Grotius had so carefully made between the Law of Nature and the Law of Nations, and who held the customs and usages, which nations generally observe, to be perfectly arbitrary unless they are deduced from the Law of Nature, did not hesitate to reject altogether the more comprehensive view of the "Jus inter Gentes," which Dr. Zouch had inaugurated, considering the "Jus Pactitium" to be not properly the subject of Science, but to belong more to the province of History than of Law. Materials, however, were fast accumulating to form a suitable subject for scientific treatment, and in the early part of the eighteenth century there appeared from the Press, in different parts of Europe, various collections of Treaties and Conventions. Leibnitz had given an impulse to the study of treaties by his "Codex Juris Gentium Diplomaticus," published by him in 1695, which he re-edited in a more enlarged form in 1700, accompanied by a second part, under the title of "Mantissa Codicis Juris Gentium Diplomatici." About the same time there appeared, at Amsterdam, a collection of Treaties in 4 vols. folio, edited by Jaques Bernard, sometime afterwards Professor in the University of Leyden. This was, however, only the prelude to a far larger collection comprised in the great work of Jean Dumont, entitled "Corps Universel Diplomatique du Droit des Gens," in 8 vols. folio, published at Amsterdam in 1726-31, a supplement to which, in 2 vols., was added by J. Rousset in 1739. John Jacob Schmauss had also published, in 1730, a collection, in two volumes, of treaties, principally of the two preceding centuries, under the title of "Corpus Juris Gentium Academicum," so that the materials for the study of positive as distinguished from natural law, was most ample in 1749, when Christian von Wolff once more vindicated, against all opponents, amongst whom Christian Thomasius, of the University of Halle, was the most formidable, the superiority of the School of Grotius, and moulded the system of European Public Law into the more complete forms in which it now exists; namely, under the threefold division of Natural Law, Customary Law, and Conventional Law.

Christian von Wolff had reached his seventieth year when he composed a work, the title of which fully explained its subject-matter, "Jus Gentium Methodo Scientifica pertractatum, in quo Jus Gentium Naturale ab eo, quod Voluntarii Pactitii et Consuetudinarii est, accurate distinguitur." Von Wolff introduced into his system of Public Law a distinction between the "Jus Naturale" and the "Jus Voluntarium," with a view to greater precision, in pursuance of a theory of international society, according to which the family of Nations, constituted as a "Civitas Maxima," has a right to impose upon its members certain laws in their common interest, and to compel them to observe them. It has been objected to Von Wolff, that in resting the obligation of his "Jus Gentium Voluntarium" on an imaginary Family of Nations, he has been misled by his excessive desire to demonstrate everything, inasmuch as history does not supply evidence of any such universal association; nay, it may be argued that the theory is irreconcilable with the rights of independence, one of the attributes of Sovereign States. But the error of Von Wolff was more an error of form than of substance. He perceived that the European Nations, although juridically independent as communities, were morally dependent upon one another in respect of the satisfaction of their mutual wants by friendly intercourse, and that such intercourse could only be permanently maintained under conditions of reciprocity, which gave rise to the formation, as it were, of an "Inner Circle" of the more civilised nations, regulating their mutual intercourse by rules not applicable to the "Outer Circle" of Nations in a less cultivated State. The members of this inner circle of international life constituted the "Civitas Maxima" of Von Wolff, shadowed out somewhat indistinctly by him, and perhaps constructed on too fictitious a basis to stand the test of strict analysis.

The great feature, however, of Von Wolff's system, which made the appearance of his work an epoch in the science of the Law of Nations only second to that of Grotius, was that he taught that the Law of Nations could not be applied to States or Political Communities simply as aggregate bodies of individual men. Hobbes and Puffendorf were of one mind in maintaining that the Law of Nature, as applied to the relations of individual men as moral agents, underwent no modification in its application to States or Nations, and in contending that the maxims of the Law of Nature and of the Law of Nations were identical. On the other hand, Barbeyrac, who translated the work of Grotius into French, and enriched it with critical annotations of great value, has observed in one of his notes that although the principles of the Law of Nature are identical with those of the Law of Nations, there is a difference in the mode in which those principles are applicable to States, as distinguished from individuals. Von Wolff developed this doctrine more fully. Having admitted that Nations are in one sense aggregate bodies of individual men, upon whom certain duties are obligatory, and to whom certain rights attach in respect of the personality of the individuals, he maintained that, as Nations are composite bodies and have in their collective capacity a moral being of their own, and are in such character the subjects of obligations and rights, which result in virtue of the Law of Nature from the act of association, under which they are constituted political bodies, it follows that the nature of their moral being differs essentially from the nature of the physical individuals, of whom they are composed. When, therefore, we seek to apply to Nations the duties which the Law of Nature prescribes to individual men, and the rights which it confers on the latter in order to enable them to fulfil their duties, since such duties and such rights cannot be otherwise than consistent with the nature of their subjects, they must in their application necessarily undergo a change suitable to the new subjects to which they are applied. Thus it results that the Law of Nations cannot be in every particular the same as the Law of Nature regulating the actions of individual men.

The authority due to the original work of Von Wolff has, by a caprice of fortune, been transferred to the lighter and more agreeable work of M. de Vattel, who has acknowledged, in his Preface, his obligation to the great philosopher of the University of Halle. M. de Vattel, however, was not a blind follower of Von Wolff. He combated his theory of a "Civitas Maxima" or Great Republic of Nations, whose laws, according to Von Wolff, dictated by sound reason and founded on necessity, should regulate the alterations to be made in the natural and necessary Law of Nations, as the civil laws of a particular State determine what modifications shall take place in the natural law of individuals. In opposition to that theory Vattel undertook to show, that all the modifications and restrictions which the rigour of the natural law must be made to undergo in the affairs of Nations, and from which the voluntary Law of Nations is formed, are deducible from the natural liberty of nations, from the attention due to their common safety, from the nature of their mutual correspondence, their reciprocal duties and the distinctions of their various rights. "Since Nations," he goes on to say, "in their transactions with one another are equally bound to admit those exceptions to and modifications of the rigours of the necessary law, whether they are deduced from the idea of a Great Republic, of which all nations are supposed to be members, or derived from the sources above enumerated, there can be no reason why the system, which thence results, should not be called the voluntary Law of Nations, as distinguished from the necessary, internal and consensual Law. Names are of very little consequence, but it is of considerable importance to distinguish these two kinds of law, in order that we may never confound what is just and good in itself with what is only tolerated through necessity."

Von Wolff and De Vattel may be said to have exhausted the subject of the natural Law of Nations by patiently observing the actual relations of Nations, and by carefully analysing those relations and inferring from them general rules and principles. What chiefly remained to be done was to combine those principles with the results of established usage and of treaty engagements.

Leibnitz, as already mentioned, had given an impulse to the study of treaties in the early part of the eighteenth century. The Conventional branch of the Public Law of Europe may in fact be said to have grown up almost entirely since the Thirty Years' War, so that in the time of Grotius it was not of sufficient importance to arrest his attention or to require a special treatment at his hands. Within a century however after the Thirty Years' War, contracts of alliance and treaties of peace had come to be recorded so frequently in history, that there was a mass of positive Law defining the special relations of most of the European States towards one another, and exceptional to the general Law, so that it became necessary to reduce it into a systematic form in order to master the study of the entire system of European Public Law. During the eighteenth century the Cabinets of Europe were averse to any collective publication of their treaties, and when an eminent German jurist, John Jacob Moser, projected a great work in 1780, which was intended to embrace the whole circle of European

State Affairs since the death of the Emperor Charles VI. (1740), the Cabinets of the Sovereigns of Europe were closed against his proposals, and he accordingly abandoned his design. His scheme, however, was revived before the conclusion of the eighteenth century by George Frederic von Martens, Professor of Law in the University of Gottingen, who distinguished not merely the Law of Nature from the Law of Nations, but the general Law of Nations from the practical Law of Nations as received in Europe, showing how the European system of Public Law rests not merely on general abstract principles, but also on the usages and conventions of the European States ("Primæ lineæ Juris Gentium Europæarum practici," Gottingen, 1785). It is not too much to say that in accordance with the maxim already quoted, "La guerre enfante le Droit," the twenty years of almost uninterrupted warfare, during which the First Napoleon endeavoured to erect an Empire, only second to that of Charlemagne, on the foundations of the French Republic of 1793, evoked a spirit of combined action amongst the Nations of Europe, cemented by a carefully considered system of General Treaties, the outcome of which has been an European Concert of Public Law. It has resulted accordingly that each State, besides its special interests, has also interests in common with the general body of States, and the natural independence of the individual States has been, in certain matters, subordinated to the general welfare of the European community. The methods whereby this result has been brought about, which has involved from time to time departures from the established usage, has been by consultations amongst the leading European Powers assembled in Congress, and recording in the Protocols of their Conferences the principles upon which their conclusions have been based, to which it has been usual to invite the adherence of the Powers not represented in the Congress. Where those conclusions have been of a remedial character as regards any defect of the Customary Law, a general adherence has for the most part been given to them, and the Customary Law of Europe has thus been accommodated to the growing wants of an advancing civilisation. For instance, by an annexe to the Principal Act of the Congress of Vienna of 1815, it was agreed that the navigation of great rivers separating or traversing more than one State, should be open to every one for purposes of commerce from the point where such rivers become navigable, to the point where they discharge their waters into the sea, subject always to moderate navigation dues; and to this convention all the Christian States of Europe have acceded, so that the Common Law of the Christian States of Europe, as to each nation's exclusive right of empire over its territorial waters, has been modified, and is subordinated to a conventional rule in respect of a certain class of rivers. The term "Christian States" has been used here for the sake of convenience, as distinguishing the States of Europe which took part in or acceded to the Principal Act of the Congress of Vienna, from the Ottoman Porte, which was not a party to that Act. On a later occasion, however, namely under the Treaty of Paris of 1856, the Ottoman Porte has been formally admitted to all the advantages of the Public Law of Europe and of the European Concert ("aux avantages du Droit Public et du Concert Europeens"), and under the same treaty, to which the Porte itself was a signatory party, it was agreed that the same principles of Law, which had been applied by the Powers assembled at Vienna in 1815 to rivers traversing or separating the territories of more than one State, should be applied to the river Danube, and it was declared that this arrangement with the Ottoman Porte forms part of the Public Law of Europe and is under its guaranty. Respecting the operation of such treaties, where their provisions are of a remedial character and have a beneficial end in view, the question whether or not their provisions are to be extended to other nations not parties to the treaties, may involve very nice considerations of international jurisprudence, as the answers must depend on certain considerations of Right ("Jus") outside the treaties.

No difficulty, however, can arise in interpreting the Act of the Congress of Vienna, as it is in terms provided "that the free navigation of the class of rivers specified in the annexe shall not be interdicted to any one, so that the navigation of such rivers may be properly held to be open to the subjects of all nations. But there may be cases of greater complication. For instance, under the Declaration of Maritime Law annexed to the same Treaty of Paris in 1856, certain relaxations of the Customary Law of Nations in time of war have been agreed upon for the benefit of neutrals. There is, on the other hand, a special proviso that the Declaration shall not be obligatory except between the Powers who have signed it or shall accede to it. But the second article of the Declaration provides, in derogation of the Common Law of the Sea, as recorded in the Consolat del Mar, that the neutral flag in time of war shall cover enemy's cargo with the exception of contraband of war; and the third article provides that neutral goods, with the exception of contraband of war, are not liable to capture under an enemy's flag. It has been suggested by an American publicist of note, that if a nation that is a party to the Declaration should be at war with a nation which is not a party to it, the former nation would not be bound to abstain from seizing enemy's goods on board of a vessel under the flag of a neutral nation which is a party to the Declaration, and "thus in fact all parties to the Declaration, when they are neutral, may lose the benefit of it in such a war." But both France and Great Britain, the two Powers with whom the Declaration originated, have in practice put a liberal interpretation on the second and third articles, which is calculated to relieve all neutrals, which have adhered to the Declaration of Paris, from any fear of losing the benefit of their adherence to it under the circumstances of such a war. For instance, in anticipation of a joint war against China, which latter Power has not adhered to the Declaration of Paris, France and Great Britain, as allies in the event of such a war, issued, in the month of March, 1860, each of them an Ordinance or Decree as to the observance of the Rules of Maritime Law, under the Declaration of Paris of 1856, towards the vessels and goods of the enemy and of neutrals, and they announced that as regards the ships of any neutral Power party to the Declaration, the flag of such Power should cover the enemy's goods with the exception of contraband of war, and further, that the goods of neutrals, with the exception of contraband of war, should not be liable to capture under the enemy's flag, by reason only of the said goods being under the enemy's flag. A like interpretation of the Declaration of Paris has been adopted by the Republics of Peru and Chili, in 1865, in a war against Spain, which latter Power has not adhered to the Declaration of Paris, so that, unless these precedents should be disregarded, it may be presumed that the Declaration of Paris is to be interpreted in the most liberal manner as regards neutrals in time of war, so as to accord with the preamble which recites that the object of the Powers which were parties to the Declaration was to render war as little onerous as possible to neutrals. The same liberal interpretation of the second and third articles of the Declaration was adopted by the French Government in the war with Prussia of 1870-71. By the ninth article of the French instructions of 25 July, 1870, the commanders of the French cruisers were directed not to examine cargo on board of neutral vessels for the purpose of ascertaining its ownership, nor to seize neutral merchandise on board of enemy vessels, with the exception of contraband of war, and these principles were declared to be applicable to Spain and to the United States, notwithstanding those Powers had not adhered to the Declaration of Paris.

On the other hand, the same Declaration of Paris supplies an instance in which, in accordance with another acknowledged principle of general jurisprudence, where a clause of a written instrument is of a prohibitive or restrictive character, it must be continued strictly. Thus, the first article of the Declaration is in terms "Privateering (La Course) is abolished;" in other words, the article prohibits, to all the Powers which are parties to the Declaration, the granting of Letters of Marque. Accordingly, when the King of Prussia issued a decree on 24 July, 1870, constituting a Volunteer Naval Force to be under the same discipline and under the same articles of war as the German Federal Navy, and to sail under the Federal flag, Great Britain held that the institution of such a volunteer navy did not involve any breach of the first article of the Declaration of Paris, and that the French Government, which had by a "note verbale" invited the attention of Great Britain to the subject, had no sufficient cause to call upon the British Government to object to the decree of the Prussian Government, as infringing the Declaration¹. With regard to the Declaration itself, whilst it imposes no obligation on the States which have declined to adhere formally to it, wishing to preserve their full liberty of action under the necessities which war may impose upon them, the probability is that they will in time conform themselves to a restriction of the practice of warfare on the High Seas, which, although it may be authorised by the customary Law of Nations, is now discarded by the public opinion of so many of the foremost States of the civilised world.

John Louis Klüber, Professor in the University of Heidelberg, and subsequently Councillor of State to the Grand Duke of Baden, was present, under the authority of his Government, at Vienna during the sittings of the Congress in 1815, and had opportunities of becoming acquainted with the important diplomatic questions discussed in the Congress, and the solution given to them. The result was a publication on his part of a collection of the Acts of the Congress of Vienna, in nine volumes, which is the text-book on the subject. It had, however, been preceded by a work from his pen entitled "Le Droit des Gens Moderne de l'Europe," which appeared in Paris in 1818. The object of this work was to give an impulse to the study of the Positive Law of Nations, as a help to his contemporaries, who might be intending to devote themselves to the public service of their respective States, and more especially to the study of the Diplomatic Science. It is usual to speak of Diplomacy as an art, and in this sense of the term to describe a skilful negotiator of a treaty as an able diplomatist. But just as there is a Science of Logic as well as an Art of Logic, so there is a Science of Diplomacy as well as an Art of Diplomacy. When Leibnitz published his "Codex Juris Publici Diplomaticus," he invited attention to the treaties and other international acts of the European Powers as a branch of the Public Law of Europe, with which it was necessary for Statesmen to become familiar, before they undertook to direct the foreign relations of their respective States. In order, therefore, that a statesman should have any just claim to the title of a Diplomatist, in the Leibnitzian sense of the term, he must have acquired a competent knowledge of the treaties and other international acts of the European Powers, and of the motives that have led to them; and before he can expect to be regarded as a sagacious Diplomatist he must have become sufficiently familiar with the principles of international jurisprudence, as to be able to distinguish between the provisions of treaties and other international acts, the application of which ought to be restricted to the subjects of the signatory Powers, and acts, of which the benefit is to be extended to the subjects of other Powers. It is in this sense of the high vocation of the Diplomatist that the founders of the Chichele Professorship at Oxford have entitled it the Professorship of International Law and Diplomacy. For instance, under an annexe to the First Protocol of the Treaty of London of 1871, the European Powers, who took part in the Congress of Paris of 1856, have joined in a Declaration, namely, that it is an essential principle of the Law of Nations (Droit des Gens), that no Power can release itself from the obligations of a treaty, except in pursuance of the assent of the contracting parties by means of an amicable understanding. It may be asserted with some reason that this protocol is simply declaratory of the pre-existing Law of Nations, but if that be granted, a question may be raised in what sense are we to interpret the phrase "Law of Nations"? Are we to extend its meaning as widely as Professor Bluntschli, who has laid it down that "International Law is not restricted to European nations. Its domain extends over the whole surface of the globe"? or shall we adopt Professor Frederic de Martens' view, that reciprocity is a cardinal principle of contemporary international Law, and that the application of the Law of Nations, as a system distinguished from the Law of Nature, is confined to such civilised States as recognise in their international relations the obligations of reciprocity. It should be borne in mind that amongst the parties to this Declaration were the Padichah of the Ottomans and the Emperor of all the Russias, both of which Powers are Asiatic as well as European Powers, and that as Asiatic Powers they have territories abutting on the territory of semi-civilised States, to say nothing of the fact that the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, who was also a party to the Declaration, has also, as Empress of India, territories conterminous with those of semi-civilised States. Professor Frederic de Martens, in his valuable work recently published under the title of "Traité de Droit International ¹," contends that the relations between civilised and semi-civilised States are prescribed by Natural Law, that is, by a definite body of principles derived from the moral nature and the reason of man, whilst contemporary International Law is the result of civilised life, and does not extend beyond the nations which recognise the fundamental principles of European civilisation. According then to this restricted view of International Law it would seem that the phrase "Law of Nations," as it occurs in the protocol of the Treaty of London of 1871, may properly be taken to signify the Consuetudinary Law of Europe, of which the Signatory Powers recognise the binding force, as regards their treaty-engagements with other Powers. This limited interpretation of the Declaration leaves untouched the maxim of Natural Law, that plighted faith is to be maintained even towards semi-civilised peoples, who are outside the pale of contemporary international law; and Professor Frederic de Martens participates in this view of Natural Law, as prescribing the obligation of good faith towards semicivilised peoples. The great value of the Declaration of 1871 is that it formally repudiates the doctrine of Spinoza, that "States are not bound to observe their treaties longer than whilst the interest or danger, which first gave rise to the treaties, continues to exist."

¹ British and Foreign State Manuel de Droit Maritime International, vol. lxi, p. 692. Perels, international, p. 194.

¹ Traduit du Russe par Alfred Leo. Paris, 1883.

If it be assumed, then, that "the Law of Nations" referred to in the Declaration of London of 1871 is the Consuetudinary Law of the European Nations, which all the civilised States of the Western Hemisphere have recognised as the Law of Nations, it is not too much to say that this Law of Nations, as distinguished from the Law of Nature, is a rule of international conduct sanctioned by a practice, which has been found to conduce to the general welfare of the community of civilised States, which reason has moulded in conformity with the progress of civilisation, and the observance of which is obligatory upon every Nation that claims to participate in the common advantages of that civilisation. It is the special province of the international jurist to make himself acquainted with this Law of Nations, and to appreciate the principles which underlie it, so that if cases arise from time to time which are without any direct precedent to govern them, he may be enabled to suggest to the Statesman a principle of Public Right, which will meet the particular difficulty without impairing the general harmony of the edifice of Public Law. In such matters a clear appreciation of the terminus a quo is often indispensable to assure the attainment of the terminus ad quem. It is not, however, the vocation of the international jurist to determine by what considerations of general interest the Statesman should be governed in choosing his line of political action ; his functions are limited to advising the Statesman, whether this or that course of political action will be in accordance with International Right, or will entail a violation of it.

With regard to the title of the present work, it has been adopted from a desire to adhere to an ancient terminology, and in much the same spirit in which Vattel observes, that names are of very little consequence, so long as the kind of law which they denote is kept distinct in the mind. The phrase "international law," which is due to the philosophical genius of Bentham, if it had been adopted by the author, might have led the reader to expect to find many subjects discussed in the present work, respecting which complete silence has designedly been maintained. On the other hand, the author is unable to assent to the objection raised against the term "Law," as applied to the Rules which govern the intercourse of Nations, on the ground that there is no common Superior to enforce their observance. An eminent Russian jurist, who represents a State respecting which there is a prevalent superstition in Western Europe, that no such thing as voluntary law is known there, has combated with abundant reason, the argument that because there is no constraining power to enforce the observance of International Right, it has no obligatory force so as to be entitled to the designation of "Law." Consent, as Professor Frederic de Martens shows, is the basis of all order and of all right, and precisely as the Law of a State is founded on the consent of its members, expressed through its legislature, which embodies the juridical convictions of the political community, so the Law of Nations rests in the consent of Nations (consensus gentium), testified by their established practice (inveterata consuetudo). On the other hand, an eminent German jurist, M. de Jhering, has published some remarkable treatises¹ in support of the thesis, which is considered in England to have the high recommendation of Mr. John Austin's approval in his well-known work "The Province of Jurisprudence determined," that where there is no Superior Power there is no Law; but M. de Jhering admits the fact, that the strongest Power does not prolong eternally a struggle with its adversary, and that it is fain sooner or later to conclude peace, and peace is the basis of all order and of all right, whilst peace presupposes consent. Unfortunately the poverty of the English language obliges us to use the term "Law" to designate "unwritten Right" (Jus non scriptum) equally as written Law (Lex); but Bracton, in his Commentaries on the Laws and Customs of England, composed more than six centuries ago, feeling himself pressed with a like difficulty, was of opinion that there was nothing unreasonable in his using the term "Lex" to designate the unwritten laws of England, seeing that they were approved by the consent of the magnates and the common warrant of the body politic. Bracton, it may be justly said, first made public the principles and rules of the unwritten law of England, hitherto known only to the King's judges, and his work closes the epoch of Customary Law in England; whilst Chief Justice Hengham, whose "Summa" occupies historically the next place to that of Bracton, instead of quoting the ancient judgments of righteous men as evidence of customary law, appeals to the recent constitutions of the Parliament of King Edward I, as instituted law, which had modified the customary law and adapted it to the altered circumstances of the age. The same reign, however, which ushered in a new era of written law in England, did not discard the use of the term "Law," as applied to Customs, seeing that it has transmitted to us the Customs of the Sea, as embodied in the judgments of the Maritime Court of Oleron, under the title of "La Leye Oleroun," and we still speak of those Customs as "the Laws of Oleron."

¹ Der Kampf im Recht, 1872. Der Zweck im Recht, Leipzig, 1877.

In conclusion, it may be justly said that the Law of Nations, although it has no law-giver to enact it, nor supreme judge to enforce it, is not the less a reality. The history of modern civilisation demonstrates its existence, and the public opinion of mankind affirms its obligation. It has been the object of the author of the present treatise to set forth the usage and custom of Nations as the best evidence of the extent to which abstract principles may be applied in elucidating the Law, which was proclaimed by Grotius two centuries ago, and the development of which has been the occupation of several of the greatest jurists of each successive age. It is a bright feature of modern civilisation that the Governments of Europe allow in their intercourse with one another considerable weight to a rule of Right as controlling the dictates of ambition or of interest, and that their respect for such Right commends itself to the conscience of the Nations which they represent. No human society has ever long subsisted, or ever can long subsist, without being bound together by good laws, much less the Great Society of Nations. It has been the signal merit of the Statesmen of Europe, who have had charge of the international interests of their respective States during the last half century, that they have agreed to modify the customary Law of Nations from time to time so as to adapt it to the enlightened demands of an advancing civilisation. The consequence has been, that however indeterminate in a certain sense are the rules of that Law, it is a Law of the Living and not of the Dead, and whilst there will always be much question about the details of its application, its flexibility as customary law will always preserve it from becoming obsolete. Meanwhile, those who by genius and study are capable of mastering its principles, and of applying them with discernment to the maintenance of a sound public opinion, where questions of Right and Wrong are at issue between Independent States, are in substance although not in form the true law-givers of Nations in this respect. They can however claim no supreme authority for themselves, but must rest satisfied with commending their views of international obligation to the reason of Statesmen, and to the conscience of mankind at large.

CONTENTS.

CHAPTER I.

NATIONS AS SUBJECTS OF LAW.

Sect.	Page
1. Nations, Independent Political Communities.....	1
2. International Jurisprudence	2
3. Element of Roman Law	2
4. Definition of a State adopted by Grotius	4
5. Puffendorf's Definition of a State	4
6. Christian de Wolff	5
7. Vattel's Definition of a State.....	6
8. Growth of Natural Society.....	7
9. Natural Society of Nations	8
10. Nationalisation and Denationalisation of States.....	9
11. Hobbes' view of Political Society	11
12. Equality of Nations	11
13. Perfect and Imperfect Rights of Nations	12
14. Rights incidental to the Right of Self-Preservation	13
15. Obligations corresponding to Rights	13
16. The Good Offices of Nations discretionary	14
17. Right of Coalition	14

CHAPTER II.

INCIDENTS AND MODIFICATIONS OF INTERNATIONAL LIFE.

18. Continuity of International Life	16
19. Determination of International Life	18
20. International Recognition of Independence	19

Sect.	Page
21. International Life not determined by Political Changes within a State. Personal Treaties	20
22. Real Treaties	21
23. Sovereignty distinct from Independence	22
24. Semi-Sovereign States a Solecism	24
25. Conventional Independence of States.....	25
26. Independent States under Protection	27
27. The Principality of Monaco	28
28. The Lordship of Kniphausen	30
29. The United States of the Ionian Islands	33
30. Neutrality of a Protected Independent State	36
31. The Free City of Cracow	37
32. Its Internal Constitution a subject of Treaty.....	39
33. Cracow and the Ionian Islands.....	42
34. The extinct Republic of Poglizza	43
35. The Republic of Andorre.....	44
36. The Republic of San Marino	46

CHAPTER III.

NATIONAL STATE-SYSTEMS OF CHRISTENDOM.

37. Single or United States	47
38. Personal Union of Independent States	48
39. Real Union of Independent States.....	49
40. Federal Union of Norway and Sweden	51
41. Diversity of Federal Unions.....	55
42. The United States of America.....	56
43. The Constitution of 1787.....	57
44. The Articles of Confederation of 1778.....	58
45. The Argentine Confederation	59
46. A Single State decentralised	60
47. The Constitution of the Argentine State	61
48. The Argentine Provinces.....	62
49. The Swiss Confederation of 1648	63

CONTENTS.

xlvii

Sect.	Page
50. The Helvetic Confederation of 1815	64
51. The League of Sarnen of 1832	65
52. The Swiss Confederation of 1848	66
53. Analogy between the Swiss Confederation and certain Federal Unions	69
54. Origin of the Germanic Confederation	70
55. Federal Act of 1815	72
56. Final Act of 1820..	73
57. The Ordinary Assembly of the Diet	77
58. The Plenum or Full Chapter of the Diet.....	79
59. Permanent Character of the Germanic Confederation	82
60. The German Empire of 1871	83

CHAPTER IV.

THE OTTOMAN EMPIRE.

61. The International Relations of the Mahommedan World.....	88
62. Admission of the Porte into the Concert of European Nations. Treaty of Paris, 30 March, 1856. Declaration of Maritime Law	90
63. Constitution of the Ottoman Empire—Christian and Mahommedan dependencies	92
64. The States on the Barbary Coast.....	95
65. Early Treaties with the Sublime Porte. Anomalous condition of the Barbary States. Algiers formerly a Vassal State of the Ottoman Empire, now a dependency of France. Tripoli, formerly an hereditary Regency, now a Vilayet of the Ottoman Empire under a removable Vali	98
66. Anomalous position of Tunis—Tunis lately a Vilayet of the Ottoman Empire, now under a French Protectorate	99
67. Egypt formerly a Vilayet, now a Vassal State of the Ottoman Empire under an hereditary Khedive—Treaty of London, 15 July, 1840.....	104

Sect.	Page
68. Principality of Samos, an autonomous dependency of the Porte under a Christian Prince paying tribute to the Porte—Diplomatic note of 10 Dec. 1832	113
69. Bulgaria, an autonomous and tributary Principality under a Christian Prince—Treaty of Berlin, 1878.	114
70. Eastern Roumelia, an autonomous Province under a Christian Vali nominated by the Porte in consultation with the Signatory Powers of the Treaty of Berlin of 1878.....	117
71. The Lebanon, an autonomous Province under a Christian Governor-General nominated by the Porte in consultation with the Signatory Powers of the Treaty of Paris of Sept. 1860	118
72. Bosnia and Herzegovina under Treaty arrangements occupied and administered by Austria-Hungary	120
73. The Island of Cyprus occupied and administered by Great Britain under a Treaty of Alliance with the Porte of 4 June, 1878	121

CHAPTER V.

THE KINGDOMS OF THE LOWER DANUBE.

74. Principality of Servia—Treaties of Sistova, Bucharest, Adrianople, Ackermann	125
75. The Kingdom of Servia established on 6 March, 1882	128
76. The Principalities of Walachia and Moldavia—Treaty of Carlowitz	130
77. Treaties of Kutschuk-Kainardji, Bucharest, Adrianople, St. Petersburg	132
78. Convention of Balta-Liman	135
79. Treaty of Paris of 1856.....	136
80. Moldavia and Walachia united under the title of Roumania. The Kingdom of Roumania established on 22 May, 1881.....	137

Sect.	Page
81. Principality of Montenegro—Congress of Paris of 1856—Its Independence recognised by the Treaty of St. Stefano of 3 March, 1878, confirmed by the Treaty of Berlin of 13 July, 1878	140

CHAPTER VI.

SOURCES OF THE LAW OF NATIONS.

82. Natural and Positive Law	145
83. Natural Law of Nations	146
84. Positive or Voluntary Law of Nations	147
85. Vattel's Subdivision of Positive Law	148
86. Customary and Conventional Law	150
87. Identity of the Law of Nations with the Law of Nature, according to Hobbes and Puffendorf ...	151
88. The Law of Nations a Special Science, according to De Wolff and Vattel	152
89. Essential Difference between Nations and Individual Human Beings	153
90. The Law of Nature	153
91. Identical Natural Law of Rude and Civilised Nations.....	154
92. Growth of the Positive Law of Nations	155
93. Study of the Law of Nations in England	157
94. Courts of the Law of Nations	158
95. Customary or Consuetudinary Law of Nations.....	159
96. Relations with Non-Christian Powers exceptional...	161
97. The Diplomatic Science	163
98. Conventional Law of Nations.....	164
99. Views of Martens and others contrasted with those of Schmalz and others.....	165
100. Ortolan's View of the Effects of Conventions on General Law	167
101. Wheaton's Earlier and Later Views	168
102. Illustration as to Contraband of War	169

Sect.	Page
103. Preambles and Recitals of a Declaratory Character .	173
104. Objections to the Idea of any Law properly speaking between Nations.....	174
105. International Morality distinct from the Law of Nations	175

CHAPTER VII.

RIGHT OF SELF-PRESERVATION.

106. Absolute and Conditional Rights of Nations.....	178
107. Right of Self-Defence	179
108. Treaty-Limitations of such Right	180
109. Right of Self-Aggrandisement	181
110. Right of anticipating Attack	183
111. Right of Confederation	185
112. The Balance of Power	187

CHAPTER VIII.

RIGHT OF ACQUISITION.

113. Establishment of a Nation in a Country	191
114. Juridical Notion of Possession	192
115. Possession as founding a Right of Property	193
116. Primitive and Derivative Acquisition	195
117. Settlement of a Nation	196
118. Right of Occupation	196
119. Right of Discovery	197
120. Notification of Discovery	198
121. Acts confirmatory of Occupation	200
122. Discovery followed by Settlement constitutes a Perfect Title	201
123. Extent of Right of Discovery	203
124. Extent of Right of Occupation	204
125. Principles of Law advanced by the United States of America	205

CONTENTS.

li

Sect.	Page
126. Discovery of the Mouth of a River	207
127. Conflict with acknowledged Law	209
x 128. Right of Settlement	210
129. Usucaption or Prescription.....	212
130. Territory of the Hudson's Bay Company	213
131. Right of Contiguity	214
132. Arcifinious States	215
133. Discovery of the New World	217
134. Settlements in the New World	218
135. Possessory Right of Native Indians	220
136. Agriculture in relation to pasture	220
137. The Indian Title	221
✓ 138. Derivative Acquisition	224
139. Title by Cession	226

CHAPTER IX.

RIGHTS OF POSSESSION.

140. The Territory of a Nation	228
141. Extension of Territory.....	229
142. Empire a primary Territorial Right	230
143. Empire distinct from Domain.....	230
144. Empire over things which cannot be appropriated .	231
145. Empire over Territorial Rivers	232
146. Modification of Right of Empire by Compact	235
147. Empire over Frontier Rivers	236
148. Treaty stipulations as to use of Frontier Rivers ...	237
149. Conventional Law of Europe as to the Great Rivers of Europe	240
150. The Navigation of the Danube under the control of an European Commission since 1856.....	241
151. Prolongation of the Commission under the Treaty of Berlin, 1878, and the Treaty of London of 10 March, 1883	243

Sect.	Page
152. Establishment of the mixed Commission of the Danube by the Treaty of 1883	247
153. The Thalweg or Midchannel of a River the boundary of Conterminous States	249
154. Right of Alluvion	251
155. Prescriptive Rights over Rivers	252
156. The Stade or Brunshausen Toll	253

CHAPTER X.

RIGHT OF JURISDICTION.

157. Incidents of the Right of Empire	257
158. National Sovereignty properly Territorial	258
159. The Jus Civile of a State operative only within its Territory	259
160. The Comity of Nations sometimes gives effect to Foreign Law	261
161. Personal, Real, and Mixed Statutes	263
162. Growth of Private International Jurisprudence ...	265
163. Exceptional position of Europeans whilst resident amongst Asiatics	266
164. Personal Actions of Foreigners	268
165. Ex-territoriality of certain Foreign Persons and Things	271
166. Merchant Vessels are subject to the Territorial Law	272
167. Right of Emigration	274
168. Domicil, the criterion of National Character	275
169. Jurisdiction and Remedies	277
170. Comity of Nations in regard to Personal Property .	279
171. Domicil of Origin and Domicil of Choice	281

CHAPTER XI.

RIGHT OF THE SEA.

Sect.	Page
172. The use of the open Sea common to all mankind...	284
173. A Common Law of the Sea.....	285
174. Affinity to the Roman Law in certain matters	286
175. Origin of the Admiralty Jurisdiction.....	288
176. Its connection with that of the Consules Maris ...	289
177. Piracy justiciable everywhere	290
178. Concurrence of Admiralty with National Jurisdiction	291
179. National Jurisdiction over the open Sea	292
180. Maritime Jurisdiction of a Nation.....	293
181. Territorial Seas distinguished from Jurisdictional waters	293
182. Prescriptive Right over portions of the Sea	295
183. Narrow Straits.....	296
184. The rule of the Medium Filum	299
185. Right of Fishery on the High Seas	300
186. Neutrality of Jurisdictional Waters	301
187. Right of Maritime Toll in respect of Lighthouses and Sea-marks.....	304
188. Prescriptive Right of Sea-tolls—The Sound Dues..	305
189. The Straits between the Mediterranean and the Black Sea	308
190. The Comity of Nations in matters of Revenue and Quarantine	309
191. Right of Fishery in Jurisdictional Waters—Convention between Great Britain and France	311
192. Agreement of 1874 between the British and German Governments.....	314
193. Ceremonial of the High Seas	316
194. Ceremonial within Jurisdictional Waters	319
195. Origin of the Mercantile and of the Military Flag of the Sea	321

Sect.	Page
196. Certain States only entitled to a Mercantile Flag ..	324
197. Project of a Swiss Mercantile Flag of the Sea	327
198. The Jerusalem or Terra Santa Flag	330

CHAPTER XII.

RIGHT OF LEGATION.

199. Origin of Legations.....	333
200. The person of an Ambassador sacred	334
201. The Right of Legation an Imperfect Right	335
202. Reception of an Ambassador discretional	336
203. Conditional Reception of a Subject as a Foreign Minister	337
204. Various Orders of Diplomatic Agents	339
205. Classification of Public Ministers in the Eighteenth Century	342
206. Rule of the Congress of Vienna	344
207. Diplomatic Agents of the First Class.....	345
208. Diplomatic Agents of the Second Class.....	348
209. Diplomatic Agents of the Third and the Fourth Class	349
210. Resident Missions	350
211. Moldavian and Walachian Chargés d'Affaires at the Ottoman Porte	352
212. Letters of Credence	353
213. Full Powers	358
214. Instructions	360
215. Ceremonial of Reception	363 ✓
216. The Sacred Character of an Ambassador	365
217. His Ex-territoriality	365
218. Ex-territoriality of the Ambassador's Hotel, and of his Suite	367
219. The Ambassador's Jurisdiction over the personnel of the Embassy.....	368

CONTENTS.

lv

Sect.	Page
220. Liability of an Ambassador to the payment of Local Dues	369
221. Liberty of Religious Worship	370
222. Inviolability of an Ambassador passing through the Territory of a Third Power	373
223. Consuls not Diplomatic Agents	378

CHAPTER XIII.

RIGHT OF TREATY.

224. The Sacred Character of Leagues between Nations	382
225. Leagues may be in confirmation or in extension of Natural Right	384
226. Religious Obligation of every League	385
227. Equal and Unequal Leagues	386
228. Unequal Leagues not contrary to Equity	387
229. Personal and Real Leagues	388
230. Tests of Continuing Treaties	389
231. The Holy Alliance of 1815 a strictly personal League	391
232. History of the Holy Alliance	394
233. The Family Compact of the House of Bourbon.....	397
234. Treaties of Navigation and Commerce	398
235. Treaties of Jurisdiction	402
236. Treaties of Extradition	405
237. Civil Law of the Romans as to Fugitives from Justice	407
238. Common Law of Nations	407
239. Extradition of Fugitive Slaves and of Deserters a frequent subject of Treaty-engagement	409
240. Extradition of Political Offenders exceptional	410
241. Treaties of Extradition for the most part tempo- rary	411
242. British Statutes on Extradition	416
243. Treaties of Boundary	417

Sect.	Page
244. Judicial Decisions as to the Permanent Object of Certain Treaties	419
245. Treaties which create a Servitude of Public Law ...	423
246. Treaties of Equal and Unequal Alliance.....	424
247. Treaties of Protection	427
248. Treaties of Subsidy	428
249. Treaties of Guaranty	430
250. Treaties of Neutrality	437
251. Conclusion and Ratification of Treaties	438
252. Expiration and Renewal of Treaties	440

CHAPTER XIV.

CAPITULATIONS OF THE OTTOMAN PORTE.

253. Early Phœnician and Greek Factories in Egypt ...	443
254. An Amalphitan Factory at Alexandria in the ninth century—Pisan Capitulation of 1173—Mahom- medan Factory at Canton in the ninth century...	446
255. System of Personal Laws throughout Europe	448
256. National autonomy assured to the French in the Levant by the Treaty of 1535	453
257. Privileges assured to English subjects in the Ottoman dominions in 1580	457
258. Privileges secured to the Dutch in 1612	459
259. Austrian Capitulations of 1615	459
260. Prussian Capitulations of 1761	460
261. Swedish Capitulations of 1737; Danish, of 1756; Spanish, of 1782; Russian, of 1783; Italian, of 1740; Belgian, of 1838; Portuguese, of 1843; Greek, of 1855.....	460
262. United States Capitulations of 1830; Brazilian, of 1858	462
263. Origin of the term "Capitulations"—Covenant of Mahomet of 625—Capitulation of the Kaliph Omar of 636.....	463
264. Treaty of Paris, 1856	466

THE LAW OF NATIONS.

CHAPTER I.

NATIONS AS SUBJECTS OF LAW.

Nations independent political Communities—Science of the Law of Nations—Element of Roman Law—Definition of a State adopted by Grotius—Puffendorf's Definition of a State—Christian de Wolff—Vattel's Definition of a State—Growth of Natural Society—Natural Society of Nations—Nationalisation and Denationalisation of States—Hobbes' view of political Society—Equality of Nations—Perfect and Imperfect Rights of Nations—Rights incidental to the Right of Self-preservation—Obligations corresponding to Rights—The good offices of Nations discretionary—Right of Coalition.

§ 1. THE term Nation, in its primary and etymological sense, denotes a race of men, in other words, an aggregate body of persons, exceeding a single family, who are connected by the ties of a common lineage, and perhaps by a common language. In a secondary and political sense the term Nation signifies a society of persons occupying a common territory, and united under a common government, in other words, a Commonwealth or State. It is from this latter point of view that we regard Nations, when we speak of their mutual intercourse being governed by certain rules, which are of paramount obligation, and from the operation of which no Nation can withdraw itself, without renouncing at the same time the fellowship of other Nations. Those rules, being of universal application, admit of scientific investigation, and may be reduced to method; and the science which is conversant with those rules is the Science of the Law independent political Communities.

Nations,

of Nations, in other words, International Jurisprudence.

Science of the Law of
Nations.

§ 2. The Science of the Law of Nations may be accordingly defined to be the Science of the Rules which govern the International Life of States. All States however do not enjoy International Life. Thus the States which constitute the North American Union do not exercise individually any international action, either in relation to one another or in relation to foreign States. The States which form the Helvetic Confederation are under similar conditions, as well as the Christian States of the Ottoman Empire, which have not been recognised under the Treaty of Berlin of 13th July, 1878, as Independent States. On the other hand, the States which composed the Germanic Confederation of 1815 were both Germanic States and members of the European family of Nations; but after the withdrawal of Austria from that Confederation, the States which have formed themselves in 1871 into a new Confederation under the name of the German Empire, have ceased to be members of the European family of Nations, and are simply States of the German Empire.

Element of Roman
Law.

§ 3. We must not expect to find in the works of the earlier writers on Public Law any very complete definition of the elements, which impart to a State the character of a Nation. Amidst the total disorganisation of the European State-System consequent on the Reformation and the religious alliances of the Thirty Years' War, Grotius found no element remaining either in the Feudal or in the Ecclesiastical Body of Law, upon which he could venture to build up a system of permanent relations between Nations. He fell back accordingly upon those views of a State-System to which the early Jurisprudence of Rome had given authority, and framed his definition of a State upon the classical model which exists in Cicero's treatise on Political Law¹. The treatise itself, in which the original definition occurs, was not indeed before the eyes of Grotius, as it was lost sight of in Western Europe towards the close of the twelfth century², and the fragments of the Vatican Palimpsest, from which the original text has been partially restored, were only deciphered in the earlier part of the present century; but the definition of a State in the identical language of the great Roman Jurisconsult, and as falling from the lips of Scipio Africanus himself, had been embodied by St. Augustine in his "City of God³;" and was transmitted therein to the Jurists of the 17th and 18th centuries. It has been conjectured by the learned cardinal Angelo Mai, the decipherer of the Vatican Palimpsest, that the perusal of Cicero's treatise first suggested to St. Augustine the idea of his incomparable Work. However that may be, the stamp of St. Augustine's approval, having been impressed upon the conception of the great Roman Jurisconsult, commended it with additional force to the acceptance of Grotius, who, in seeking to construct for the first time a system of Public Law upon the combined basis of Natural Right and Universal Consent, was anxious to keep in sight as many as possible of the great landmarks, which the pioneers of

Cicero de Republica.

S. Augustinus de Civitate Dei.

¹ Est igitur, inquit Africanus, res publica res populi; populus autem non omnis hominum cœtus quoquo modo congregatus, sed cœtus multitudinis juris consensu et utilitatis communione sociatus. De Republica, Lib. I. c. 25.

² John of Salisbury in the 12th century is the last writer in Western Europe, who seems to have had access to the original text of Cicero's treatise.

³ De Civitate Dei, L. XIX. c. 21. St. Augustine adds, "ubi ergo non est ista justitia, profecto non est cœtus hominum juris consensu et utilitatis communione sociatus."

Juridical Science had set up, and which had hitherto connected International Jurisprudence with general Morals.

Definition of a State adopted by Grotius.

§ 4. Grotius has accordingly defined a State in these words; "Est autem civitas cœtus perfectus liberorum hominum juris⁴ fruendi et communis utilitatis causa sociatus⁵." It has been remarked by Barbeyrac in his annotation to this passage, that Grotius has followed Aristotle in defining a State to be a complete Society, in other words, a Society containing within itself all that is necessary for living commodiously and happily. But a more important variation from the classical model may be observed in the substitution of liberorum hominum for multitudinis, a substitution which implies the freedom of the individual man in a natural state. It is this freedom of the individual man, which forms the keystone of the arch upon which the whole system of Grotius rests. A State accordingly, in the contemplation of Grotius, is a complete body of free men associated together for the enjoyment of Right and for the common good.

Puffendorf's definition of a State.

§ 5. Puffendorf, on the other hand, whose object was to identify the Law of Nations with a system of Moral Right based solely on Natural Law, in opposition to the system of Grotius, has thus defined a Civil State: "It is a compound Moral Person, whose will being united and tied together by those covenants which before passed amongst the multitude, is deemed the will of all, to the end that it may use

⁴ Jus or Right (Droit) has been defined to be The External freedom of the Moral person. Neque enim Juris nomine aliud significatur, quam libertas, quam quisque habet, facultatibus natu-

ralibus secundum rectam rationem utendi. Hobbes de Civ. c. i. § 7.

⁵ De Jure Belli et Pacis, L. I. c. i. § 14.

and apply the strength and riches of private persons towards maintaining the common peace and security⁶.

The classification of a State under the head of a Moral Person for the purpose of assimilating its rights and duties to those of a Natural Person involves a metaphysical conception of the Being of a State. Puffendorf's definition will accordingly afford no assistance in an inquiry in which the real or constituent elements of a State are the subject of investigation. The special merit of Puffendorf is that he was the first to maintain that natural right and international right are not restricted to Christian nations, but are a bond between all Nations, of whatever religion they may be, inasmuch as every Nation is a moral unit of the great human Society.

§ 6. Christian de Wolff, the master of Vattel, does ^{Christian de Wolff.} not pause to define a Nation, but commences his treatise on the Law of Nations by defining its subject to be the science of the Right, which Nations or people enjoy in relation to one another, and of the obligations corresponding to it. "Scientiam juris quogentes sive populi inter se utuntur et obligationum eidem respondentium." But, in thus defining the science which he proposes to discuss, De Wolff has indirectly indicated wherein the character of a Nation consists, when he speaks of the Right, which Nations or peoples enjoy in relation to one another, and the obligations corresponding to it. It is in the capacity of a people to fulfil the obligations of Natural Society towards other peoples without the consent of any political superior, that we discover the true characteristic of International Life. No political body, which does not possess a perfect liberty of action in such matters, can be in permanent relation to other political bodies ; for such permanent relation implies the mutual discharge of the duties of Natural Society, and such mutual discharge can only have permanent place between political bodies, which can freely reciprocate good offices, in other words, between political bodies which are sui juris and not subject to any political superior.

⁶ Law of Nature and of Nations, B. VIII. c. 14. § 13. entifica pertractatum. Prolegomena, § 1.

⁷ Jus Gentium Methodo Sci-

Vattel's definition
of a State.

§ 7. Vattel at the immediate outset of his work has defined Nations or States in identical terms, as "bodies politic, societies of men united together for the purpose of promoting their mutual safety and advantage by the joint efforts of their combined strength⁸." He then engrafts upon this real definition a metaphysical conception of the Being of a State, analogous to Puffendorf's notion. "Such a Society has its affairs and its interests ; it deliberates and takes resolutions in common : thus becoming a Moral Person, which possesses an understanding and a will peculiar to itself, and is susceptible of obligations and rights." He afterwards falls back into the track of De Wolff, and defines the Law of Nations to be the Science of the Right which has place between Nations or States, and the obligations corresponding to that Right ; and further, as he proceeds to examine that Right and the corresponding obligations, he characterises Nations as *Sovereign States*⁹, which are to be considered as so many free persons living together in a State of Nature. "It is a settled point," he observes, "with writers on natural law, that all men inherit from Nature perfect liberty and ⁸ Droit des Gens. Préliminaires, § 1. sovereignty, that is, absolute dominion over a certain territory.

⁹ In the sense of territorial independence, of which they cannot be deprived without their own consent. In a State the individual citizens do not enjoy them fully and absolutely, because they have made a partial surrender of them to the Sovereign. But the body of the Nation, the State, remains absolutely free and independent with respect to all other men and all other nations, as long as it has not voluntarily submitted to them¹⁰."

§ 8. Man is so constituted by Nature, that he cannot supply all his own wants, but requires the intercourse and assistance of his fellow men, either for his immediate preservation, or for the perfection of his Being. The experience of communities on this head confirms what the instinct of the individual man suggests. There is accordingly in human nature a tendency towards society, and whenever opportunity presents itself, men are found to associate themselves together for the purpose of mutually aiding and assisting one another. There thus grow up spontaneous relations of Natural Society amongst men. The law of this Natural Society is that each individual should do for the others every thing which their welfare requires, and which he can perform without neglecting the duty which he owes to himself, and this obligation of Natural Society is co-extensive with the human race¹¹. The Universal Society of the human race being thus an institution of Nature, all men are bound to cultivate it, and to discharge its duties; and they cannot release themselves from that obligation by any convention, or by any private association. When, therefore, men unite themselves in Civil Society for the purpose of forming themselves into a State, they may enter into positive engagements towards one another individually, and

Growth of Natural Society.

¹⁰ Préliminaires, § 4.

¹¹ Préliminaires, § 10.

towards the State as a community, but they continue still to be under the obligations of Natural Society towards the rest of mankind. The mode of discharging these obligations may be influenced by the institution of Civil Society, inasmuch as the individual members of a political community having agreed in certain things to act in common, and having resigned their rights, and submitted their will to the common body in every thing which regards their welfare as a community, the duty of discharging the obligations of Natural Society towards strangers, in all matters wherein the liberty of the individual members has been restricted, devolves upon the common body ; in other words; upon the State. There thus grow up spontaneously relations of Natural Society amongst States, the purpose of which is the interchange of good offices between political communities for their mutual preservation, and for the advancement of the happiness of one another. Political communities participate in this Natural Society, as free and independent bodies of men, under conditions analogous to those under which individual men participate in Civil Society. "As men," writes Vattel, "are subject to the laws of Nature, and as their union in Civil Society cannot have exempted them from the obligation to observe those laws, since by that union they do not cease to be men, the entire Nation, whose common will is but the result of the united wills of the citizens, remains subject to the laws of Nature, and is bound to respect them in all its proceedings ¹².

Natural
Society of Nations.

§ 9. International Society is thus in its elementary condition the most enlarged phase of Natural Society, wherein men hold intercourse with one another, not individually and immediately as in Civil Society, ¹² Préliminaires, § 5.

but collectively and by representation, the Body of men, of which a political community consists, holding intercourse with other like Bodies of men through the medium of the State, the internal organisation of which is immaterial, provided it represents the Civil Society for all international purposes. It is necessary for this end, that a State should possess all the qualifications for Natural Society, which the individual members of it inherit from Nature, and should be able to perform towards other States every thing which their welfare requires, and which it can effect without neglecting the duty which it owes to its own members. A State must therefore for the purposes of International Society be free and independent of all other States, in like manner as individual men are by nature free and independent of one another. Independence is accordingly the fundamental element which imparts to a State the character of a Nation. A Nation is in fact a political body, capable of discharging without the consent of any political superior the obligations of Natural Society towards other political bodies; and of regulating in concert with them the mode of discharging those obligations, either as regards the mutual action of the communities themselves, or as concerns the intercourse between individual members of them.

§ 10. A State is admitted into the fellowship of Nations either overtly by the recognition of its Independence in some Public Act on the part of the Established Powers, or tacitly by being allowed to be a contracting party to a Public Convention entered into with the Established Powers. (Thus the States of the Roman Empire of the Germans, upon the signature of the Treaty of Westphalia, became de jure members of the European family of Nations. Their nation of States.

Nationali-

Treaty of Westphalia.

capacity to make conventions among themselves and with non-Germanic Powers, without the political sanction of the Emperor and the Empire, had been under the VIIIth Article of that Treaty explicitly recognised by the established Powers, and so became part of the Public Law of Europe.) On the other hand, the Federal Union of North American States was de facto recognised as a Nation by France, when Louis XVIth concluded the Treaties of Paris, (Feb. 6th, 1778,) with the Envoys of the Thirteen Provinces; and by the Low Countries, when the States General concluded the Treaty of the Hague with them, (Octr. 8th, 1782); and the claim of the Union to be generally regarded as a Nation, became indisputable from the day when the Mother Country acknowledged de facto her former dependencies to be sui juris by entering into international engagements with the Federal Union. (Treaty of Versailles, Sept. 3, 1783.)

Denationalisation
of States.

On the other hand, the Denationalisation of a State ensues, upon its ceasing to have the capacity to enter into engagements freely with other Nations, whether it has voluntarily renounced its capacity, or has been deprived of it by a superior Power. Thus the Republics of the Valais and of Geneva, and the Principality of Neuchatel, voluntarily renounced their capacity to enter into treaty-engagements with foreign powers upon their admission into the Union of Helvetic States¹³, and the separate Nationality of each State was thenceforth merged in the common Nationality of the Federal Union. On the other hand, the princes of the Germanic Empire who were mediatised upon the formation of the Confederation of the Rhine, (July 12, 1806¹⁴), were interdicted by the independ-

Confederation
of the Rhine,
July 12.
1806.

¹³ Martens, Nouveau Recueil de Traités, IV. p. 168.

¹⁴ Ibid. VIII. p. 488.

ent members of that Confederation, to whose sovereignty they had been made respectively subject, from entering into treaty-engagements with Foreign Powers. They accordingly ceased to occupy the place in the family of Nations, into which they had been admitted by the Treaty of Westphalia.

§ 11. Hobbes has adopted a view of the origin of Political Society, according to which no community would be entitled to be regarded as a Nation, unless it were adequate to maintain its independence against all external assault by its own intrinsic strength¹⁵. Such an idea of independence as applicable to Political Societies, however tenable it may be in abstract theory, will be found in practice to be too absolute, as there are weaker and stronger members of the family of Nations, and the weaker members owe the maintenance of their independence to the mutual fears and jealousies of the more powerful Nations, whilst on the other hand the stronger members could not maintain themselves single-handed against the combined assault of the weaker Nations. A State is entitled to be regarded as independent, if it be not de jure dependent upon any other State for its freedom of political action.

§ 12. The independence of a Nation is absolute, and not subject to qualification, so that Nations in respect of their intercourse under the Common Law are Peers or Equals¹⁶; and their rights and obligations are under that law reciprocal. Power and weakness do not in this respect give rise to any dis-

Hobbes' view of political society.

Equality of Nations.

¹⁵ Necessarium itaque est ad securitatem quam quærimus obtinendam, ut numerus eorum, qui in mutuam opem conspirant, tantus sit, ut paucorum hominum ad hostes accessio non sit ipsis conspicui momenti ad victoriam. De Cive, c. 5. § 3.

¹⁶ Vattel, Préliminaires, § 18. Heffter, § 27. Klüber, § 89. Wolff, § 16.

tion, and the Principality of Montenegro is as much an independent State as the Empire of all the Russias. It results from this equality, that whatever is lawful for one Nation is equally lawful for another, and whatever is unjustifiable in the one is equally unjustifiable in the other.

Right of Self-defence.

As independence is an essential condition of Nationality, a Nation will be justified in doing or practising whatever is necessary for the maintenance of its independence. The right of self-defence is accordingly a primary right of Nations, and it may be exercised either by way of resistance to immediate assault, or by way of precaution against threatened aggression. The indefeasible right of every Nation to provide for its own defence, is classed by Vattel amongst its perfect rights.

Perfect and Imperfect Rights of
Nations.

§ 13. The distinction which Vattel has drawn between the perfect and the imperfect rights of Nations may be conveniently noticed here. "The perfect right," says Vattel¹⁷, "is that which is accompanied by the right of compelling those who refuse to fulfil the corresponding obligation; the imperfect right is unaccompanied by that right of compulsion. The perfect obligation is that which gives to the opposite party the right of compulsion; the imperfect only gives him the right to ask. The right is always imperfect, when the corresponding obligation depends on the judgment of the party in whose breast it exists, for if in such a case we had a right to compel him, he would no longer enjoy the liberty of determining as to the conduct which he should pursue, in order to obey the dictates of his own conscience. Our obligation is always imperfect with respect to other people, as long as we possess the liberty of judging how we are to act, and we retain that liberty on all occasions on which we ought to be free." A perfect right alone would thus seem to be the subject of Law. An imperfect right is a subject of Comity.

¹⁷ Droit des Gens. Préliminaires, § 17.

§ 14. Accordingly, a reasonable fear of danger to its own independence, is held to justify a Nation in having recourse to war in order to prevent attack. This right of a Nation to preserve itself from injury by anticipating attack, is a perfect right. It is the right of security, and is incidental to the right of self-preservation. When an injury has been inflicted, the same right of self-preservation authorises the injured Nation to obtain complete reparation, and to employ force for that purpose. This may be termed the right of indemnity.

Rights incidental to the right of self-preservation.

Right of Security.

Right of Indemnity.

The right of self-preservation necessarily involves all other incidental rights which are essential as means to give effect to the principal end¹⁸. Thus a Nation, after it has been attacked and has worsted its enemy, will be justified in taking precautions against a second attack by depriving its enemy of the means of renewing his aggression. The justice of all war depends upon the principles involved in the right of security and the right of indemnity. Whatever strikes at those rights strikes at the Perfect Rights of a Nation, and is a just cause of war.

§ 15. Every right which a Nation possesses under the Common Law has its corresponding obligation. The right of security accordingly involves the obligation of self-restraint, so as to avoid encroaching on the independence of other States, and the right of indemnity involves the obligation of granting redress. A Nation is mistress of her own actions as long as they do not affect the perfect rights of other Nations. It owes as a duty to itself; in the first instance, and in preference to all other Nations, to do every thing that can promote its own happiness and perfection, but it must not overstep the limit beyond which it cannot pass without impairing the happiness and perfection of another Nation. On the other hand, when a Nation cannot contribute to the welfare of another Nation without doing an essential injury to itself, it has reached the limit of its natural obligations towards that Nation, and it is considered to be under a disability to perform any further good offices towards it.

Obligations corresponding to Rights.

¹⁸ Wheaton's Elements, pt. II. c. 1. § 1.

The good offices of Nations
discre-
tional.

§ 16. Every Nation is entitled to form its own judgment whether it can perform towards another Nation any good office without neglecting the duty which it owes to itself¹⁹. Treaty-engagements however may control the exercise of a Nation's free judgment in such matters, for a Nation may voluntarily wave some portion of the liberty, which is by Nature inherent in it. In all cases, however, in which a Nation has the right of judging what its duty requires, no other Nation can compel it to act in this or that particular manner; for any attempt at such compulsion would be an encroachment on the independence of that Nation. It is otherwise where a Nation has voluntarily bound itself to perform a particular good office towards another Nation; in such a case it has exercised its independence as a Nation when it contracted the particular engagement, the strict fulfilment of which has become henceforth a matter of good faith, and not a sign of dependence.

Right of Coalition.

§ 17. Since Nations are independent communities holding intercourse with one another on terms of equality, every Nation is at liberty to regulate its own actions by its own sense of duty within the sphere of its perfect Rights. Hence a Nation is on many occasions under the obligation of allowing certain things to be done by another Nation, although it may disapprove the same, because it cannot prevent them by force without violating the independence and equality of that Nation, and so destroying the foundation of the Natural Society of Nations. The laws on which that natural society rests are of such paramount importance to the safety of all Nations, that if a more powerful State were at liberty upon its own view of justice or expediency to set them aside in regard to a weaker State; no Nation could rely with any security upon the preservation of its own existence. But every Nation has a perfect right to those things which are necessary to its preservation, and every State enters into the Society of Nations upon that understanding. All Nations have accordingly a right to combine their strength for the purpose of repressing any one or more Nations, which seek to infringe any cardinal rule of international life ²⁰. The exercise of that Right however must not extend beyond those limits which the interests of Natural Society mark out; it must be in its turn so regulated, as not to prejudice the independence of the Nation, which has provoked the interference of its Compeers.

¹⁹ Vattel, Préliminaires, § 16.

²⁰ Vattel, Droit des Gens, L. II. § 53.

CHAPTER II.

INCIDENTS AND MODIFICATIONS OF INTERNATIONAL LIFE.

Continuity of International Life—Determination of International Life—International recognition of Independence—International Life not determined by political changes within a State—Personal Treaties—Real Treaties when affected by political changes—Sovereignty distinct from Independence—Semi-Sovereign States a Solecism—Conventional Independence of States—Independent States under Protection—The Principality of Monaco—The Lordship of Kniphausen—The United States of the Ionian Islands—Neutrality of a Protected Independent State—The Free City of Cracow—Its internal Constitution a subject of treaty—Cracow and the Ionian Islands—The extinct Republic of Poglizza—The Republic of Andorre—The Republic of San Marino.

Continuity of International Life.

§ 18. THE peculiar objects of the Law of Nations being the external relations which exist between independent political Communities, considered as entire communities, it is immaterial for the purposes of that law, what may be the internal organisation of such Communities, further than to ascertain in what portion the Supreme Power resides ; for the Supreme Power controls the entire Community, and the will of the Supreme Power is the will of the Community itself in matters of external, equally as of internal, law. The Supreme Power of a State is termed the Sovereign Power properly, in reference to the members of the State who are subject to it ; but publicists have sometimes used the term Sovereign Power in a metaphorical sense, to denote the entire State or Nation, viewed from without, and the Law of Nations has accordingly been defined by them to be the law which regards the conduct of Sovereign Powers in relation to one another; the intercourse between States or Nations being, as a matter of fact, carried on between the Sovereign portions of them¹. Hence the person of the Sovereign, or Chief of the State, has been taken to represent the whole Community, and has become identified with it for purposes of negotiation and treaty. It is immaterial for international purposes what may be the peculiar organisation of the Sovereign Power within a State. For instance, whether the Chief of the State be an hereditary or an elective Monarch, whether his tenure of office be for life or for a term of years, whether his power within the State be exercised absolutely according to his own will or under limitations according to established rules, may be considerations of high importance to the subject members of each State, but are matters which do not concern other States or Nations. It is however of concern to other States or Nations that the international life of a State should not be interrupted by any change of internal order, as for instance, by the natural or political demise of the Chief of the State. Hence in States where the most absolute form of Monarchy has prevailed, and where the person of the Prince has been as closely as possible identified with the State itself, the Sovereign Power has nevertheless been distinguished in law from the person of the Prince, and the international relations between two such States have been considered to be maintained de jure between the two Crowns. Treaty-engagements between such States have accordingly not determined upon the natural or political demise of the Princes, who were the original parties to the treaties, but have been considered to monar-chies.

Absolute

¹ Austin on Jurisprudence, p. 208.

attach to their Crowns, and the obligations of the treaties have devolved to their successors in the Sovereignty. In other forms of State-Government, the internal constitution of which allows direct negotiation with other States to be carried on in the name of the State itself, the continuity of the external life of the State has been equally exempt from any interruption by internal changes.

Determination of international life.

§ 19. There are however circumstances under which the international life of a State may determine. Thus a State may be merged in its entirety in another State, and become a province or department of that State ; or it may be incorporated into a system of States, and become clothed with the Nationality of the Union. Thus the kingdom of Navarre has been merged in the kingdom of Spain, and has become a province of that kingdom ; whilst the Duchy of Burgundy has been similarly merged in the kingdom of France : on the other hand, the Principality of Neuchatel and the Republic of Valais have both been incorporated into the Union of Helvetic States, and have severally ceased to maintain independent relations with Foreign Powers. Again, a State may undergo division, and be converted into two or more independent States ; or it may be broken up, and its fragments may be absorbed into the neighbouring States. Thus the kingdom of the Netherlands underwent division in 1831, and was converted into the two independent kingdoms of Holland and of Belgium ; whilst the kingdom of Poland has been broken up and its fragments absorbed into the three neighbouring States. The international life of a State may determine at its own will, or by conquest, without the sanction of other States ; but the transformation of an independent State into two or more independent

The kingdom of the Netherlands.

States, in other words, the creation of a new independent State, is not complete until other Nations have recognised its National character. It is the quality of Independence for the first time asserted on behalf of a State, which requires recognition on the part of other Nations, not the increased or diminished extent of its territorial possessions. A State may indeed notify to other States any important additions to its territorial limits, which it may have acquired either by occupation or by cession ; but such notifications are matters of courtesy for mutual convenience, and the announcement of the fact of any such acquisition is not obligatory upon the State which makes it. Thus the United States of North America might have annexed the territory of Texas, and might have thought fit to notify to other nations the addition of a new State to the Union ; but the question of right was complete upon the admission of Texas into the Union under a Resolution of Congress, and the annexation required no recognition from third parties to give it effect. On the other hand, the transformation of the ancient kingdom of New Spain into the several independent Republics of Central America required recognition from other Powers, before it could be regarded as internationally complete, as the result of that transformation was to give birth to new independent political bodies.

§ 20. A Dependency may separate itself from the independent political community of which it has been a member, and may declare itself an Independent Sovereign State ; and so long as the New State confines its action within the Civil Society of which it is composed, it does not require any recognition of its Sovereignty from other States. But if it seeks to hold International intercourse with other States, and

Annexation of Texas.

International recognition of Independence.

claims to be received into the fellowship of Nations upon terms of equality and reciprocity with other Nations, it must obtain from them the recognition of its Independence as a preliminary step. Every other State is at liberty to grant or withhold this recognition, subject to the consequences of its own conduct in this respect; as for instance, if it grants such recognition, it may incur the hostility of the State from which the new State has separated itself; if it refuses such recognition, it may incur the hostility of the new State or its allies; but until such recognition has been universal on the part of other States, the new State is entitled to the exercise of international privileges in relation to those States only which have recognised its independence². This recognition may take place explicitly under the express provisions of a treaty of friendship or alliance, in which the independence of the new State is guaranteed by its ally: thus France recognised and guaranteed the independence of the United States of America by the treaty of Paris³ (Feb. 6, 1778); and Prussia in a similar manner recognised and guaranteed the Confederation of the Rhine by the Treaty of Tilsit⁴ (July 7, 1807); or by implication, upon the mutual interchange of accredited envoys, whereby either State acknowledges de facto the competency of the other to negotiate and contract engagements under the Law of Nations.

Treaty of Paris, Feb.
6, 1778.

International life not determined by political changes within a State.

§ 21. The International Life of a State is not determined by an internal Revolution, whereby the Supreme Power of the State is transferred from one portion of the body politic to another portion. A State does not enjoy any international rights by reason of its peculiar internal organisation, and it therefore does not forfeit any such right by a modification of its internal constitution, neither can it thereby discharge itself from any of its obligations towards other Nations. Pending a Revolution, the ordinary relations of a State towards other States may be interrupted owing to the suspended action of the Supreme Power of the State, and its temporary inability to direct the will of the entire community. But the interruption of ordinary international intercourse is an abnormal state of things, which ceases immediately upon the restoration of internal order within the State, and if the Revolution fails, the status ante revives: if, on the other hand, the Revolution proves successful, the government de facto succeeds to the rights and obligations of its predecessor in all international matters, and intercourse is resumed with other nations on that understanding. There may be exceptions however to this rule with respect to certain treaty-engagements, which come under the general division⁵ of personal as contradistinguished from real treaties. Of such kind was the famous treaty of alliance⁶ concluded in 1761, under the name of the Family Compact, between the Very Christian King and the Catholic King, and to which the other reigning Princes of the House of Bourbon were invited to accede. The engagements of this treaty necessarily determined from the moment when the princes of the House of Bourbon ceased to reign in France.

² Wheaton, Part I. c. 2. § 6. ³ Martens, Recueil, II. p. 605.

⁴ Ibid. VIII. p. 641.

Personal
Treaties.

The Family
Compact
of 1761.

§ 22. On the other hand, the identity of a Republican State in respect of real treaties is not destroyed by its conversion into a Monarchical State; "Every alliance," writes Vattel⁷, "made by a Republic is in Real Tre-

ties.

⁵ Vattel, B. II. c. 12. § 183.
Wolff, Jus Gentium, § 414.

⁶ Martens, Recueil, I. p. 16.

⁷ Vattel, B. II. c. 12. § 185.

its own nature real, for it relates only to the body of the State. When a free People, a popular State, or an aristocratical Republic concludes a treaty, it is the State itself which contracts, and her engagements do not depend on the lives of those who were only the instruments in forming them; the members of the people or of the governing body change and succeed each other, but the State still continues the same. Since, therefore, such a treaty relates directly to the body of the State, it subsists, though the form of the Republic should happen to be changed, even though it should be transferred into a Monarchy. For the State and the Nation are still the same, notwithstanding every change that may take place in the form of the government, and the treaty concluded with the Nation remains in force as long as the Nation exists. But it is manifest that all treaties relating to the form of government are exceptions to this rule. Thus two popular States that have treated expressly, or that evidently appear to have treated with the view of maintaining themselves in concert in their state of liberty and popular government, cease to be allies from the very moment that one of them has submitted to be governed by a single person." "Enimvero si in foedere consensum sit, quod statui non nisi populari proprium sit, per se patet, sublato statu populari tolli etiam foedus, ac per consequens mutata reipublicæ forma idem finiri⁹."

Sovereignty distinct from Independence.

§ 23. Grotius has been content to define a State to be a complete body of free persons, associated together to enjoy peaceably their Right, and for their common benefit⁹; and has declared the mutual relations of such bodies to be the objects of Public Law.

⁹ Wolff, Jus Gentium, § 416.

⁹ De Jure Belli et Pacis, L. I. c. I. § 14.

Wolff¹⁰ has not adopted any different view when he defined a nation as "multitudo hominum in civitatem consociatorum." Vattel, on the other hand, has defined States or Nations as "societies of men united together for the purpose of promoting their mutual safety and advantage by the joint efforts of their combined strength¹¹;" but he has subsequently endeavoured to attain to greater precision, when he says, that "every Nation that governs itself, under what form soever, without dependence on any foreign power, is a Sovereign State. Its rights are naturally the same as those of any other State. Such are the moral persons who live together in a natural society, subject to the Law of Nations. To give a nation a right to make an immediate figure in this grand society, it is sufficient that it be really sovereign and independent; that is, that it govern itself by its own authority and laws¹²." Vattel, however, has gone too far in combining Sovereignty with Independence as the criteria of Nationality; for Sovereign States are not necessarily Nations, while States internationally independent are not always Sovereign Powers. Thus the States of North America which compose the Federal Union are all *Sovereign States*¹³, but the nationality of each State is merged in the nationality of the Union. Under the Federal Compact, the members of the Union have precluded themselves from entering severally into treaty-engagements with Foreign Powers, and they can only enter into such engagements jointly as an Union of States, the treaty-making power being under the constitution of the

The United States of America
Sovereign States.

¹⁰ Wolff, Jus Gentium, Prolegomena, § 2.

1. § 4.

¹¹ Préliminaires, § 9.

¹³ Cranch's American Reports, IV. p. 212. McIlvaine v. Coxse's

¹² Droit des Gens, L. I. c. Lessee.

Union vested in the Federal Government. The States have accordingly ceased to be severally Independent Bodies Politic, and their respective rights and obligations are not the subjects of international law, but are regulated by the constitutional law of the Union. The relations of the Union, on the other hand, towards the several component States are similarly determined by the Federal Compact, whilst the relations of the Union itself towards Foreign States are regulated by a law independent of the Federal Compact; to wit, the Law of Nations. On the other hand, there may be States, which maintain independent relations with other nations, but have not full rights of sovereignty. Thus the States of the Roman Empire of the Germans enjoyed, subsequently to the peace of Westphalia, the right to form offensive and defensive alliances amongst themselves and with Foreign Powers, yet no alteration took place in their feudatory relation to the Chief of the Empire, as their Supreme Lord or Suzerain, until 1806, when the Emperor Francis II declared the Germanic Empire to be dissolved, and released the Electors, Princes, and States from their allegiance to him as Chief of the Empire. They thereupon became for the first time Sovereign Powers. So the Barbary States, whilst they were tributaries of the Ottoman Porte, and subject to the Suzerainty of the Sultan of Constantinople, exercised the right of entering into treaty-engagements, as Independent Powers, with the Christian Nations of Europe.

The States of the Roman Empire of the Germans Independent, but not Sovereign States.

Semi-Sovereign States a solecism.

§ 24. Some of the more recent writers on the Law of Nations, such as Martens¹⁴, Klüber¹⁵, and Heffter¹⁶,

¹⁴ Précis du Droit des Gens,
§ 20.

¹⁶ Heffter, Das Europäische Völkerrecht, § 19.

¹⁵ Droit des Gens, § 24.

have applied the distinctive epithet of Semi-Sovereign to such States as are recognised as Independent States under the Public Law of Europe, but have not complete rights of Sovereignty. The term Semi-Sovereign seems to have been introduced by John Jacob Moser, in his "Essays on the Law of Nations in time of Peace"¹⁷. Heffter, although he recognises the classification, considers it to be objectionable; and Wheaton has observed that "the denomination of Semi-Sovereign States is an apparent solecism in terms. As no State," he says, "can be considered at once sovereign and subject, so no State can with strict propriety be considered as half or imperfectly supreme. But as some States are by special compact dependent upon other States with respect to the exercise of certain rights essential to perfect sovereignty, such States have been termed Semi-Sovereign States."

§ 25. It is not desirable that this classification of certain States as Semi-Sovereign States should find a place in a system of law which is concerned only with the external relations which States bear to one another as independent political communities¹⁸. The term itself, "Semi-Sovereign," points at once to another system of political law, and suggests rather a subordination of position analogous to that in which the Princes and States of the Germanic Empire stood in former days relatively to the Emperor as their Suzerain or Supreme Lord, than a modification of the manner in which the foreign relations of an independent State, as such, are maintained. The international rights of the States, which rank in this ¹⁷ Beiträge zum Völkerrecht in Friedenzeiten, I. p. 508, cited by Gunther I. p. 120.

¹⁸ Neyron in his Principes du Droit des Gens Européens (Bruns-wic, 1763), adopts the division of States of the First Order and States of Second Order, meaning by the latter term States under a feudal Suzerain.

Conventional Independence
of States.

Protected
States.

category, are in substance as complete as those of any other independent State, and it is only in the mode in which those rights are exercised that a distinction is found to exist. Independent States in their normal condition communicate immediately with one another; but there are exceptional instances in which the communications of an Independent State with Foreign Powers are carried on through the medium of a third Power, which has been acknowledged by public treaties as the authorised organ of such communications. In certain of these cases the Intermediate Power has been recognised by Foreign States as exercising a protection (patrocinium) over the weaker State, and has been acknowledged in terms as the Protecting Power. The designation of *Protected States*¹⁹ would accordingly seem prima facie to be appropriate to these States in a system of international law, as being suggestive of their essential peculiarity; but as there are many protected States, which in accepting that character have abdicated altogether their independence, and do not maintain independent political relations under any modification with Foreign Powers, the designation of "Protected States" would be not sufficiently precise, and it would be necessary, in order to avoid confusion, to distinguish them further as Protected Independent States. But a definition less open to objection is suggested by the consideration that the independence which this class of States enjoys is regulated in its mode of exercise by Public Conventions. Their independence therefore may fitly be characterised as a Conventional Independence, in contradistinction to the absolute Independence which the more powerful States acknowledging no political Superior enjoy under the common Law of Nations.

¹⁹ Grotius, L. I. c. 3. s. 21. Quæst. Jur. Publici, L. I. c. 9, § 3, recognises States which by treaty are 'sub patrocinio, non sub ditione,' and Bynkershœk, speaks of States 'qui sub tutione sunt.'

§ 26. The origin of these Protected Independent States is to be referred either to special treaty-engagements between two States, under which the stronger Power has granted its protection to the weaker States, and their treaty-engagements have been formally recognised by the European Powers; or to some general treaty amongst the European Powers, under which the Protecting Power has undertaken to protect the weaker State, and the other Powers have engaged themselves to hold political intercourse with the weaker State only through the medium of the Protecting Power. In the case of Protected States, which are not members of the Family of Nations, the relations between them and the Protecting Power are for the most part founded upon some compact²⁰ between them, but as the protected State does not maintain any relations whatever with Foreign Powers, it is virtually a dependency of the Protecting Power, being distinguished from ordinary dependencies in this respect, that its rights are secured and its obligations limited by compact. It is a dependency sub modo, as distinguished from an absolute dependency.

The Native States of India are instances of Protected Dependent States, maintaining the most varied relations with the British Government under compacts with the East India Company. All these States acknowledge the supremacy of the British Government, and some of them admit its right to interfere in their internal affairs, inasmuch as the ²⁰ In the nature of an un-imperii. Grotius, L. II. c. 15. equal alliance cum diminutione s. vii. § 2.

East India Company had become virtually sovereign over them. None of these States, however, hold any political intercourse with one another or with Foreign Powers ²¹.

Principality of Monaco.

§ 27. The Principality of Monaco is a remarkable instance in Europe of a Protected Independent State; the relations of which towards the Protecting Power have been settled by special treaty-engagements between itself and the Protecting Power, which have been subsequently recognised by the European Powers. Monaco was erected into a Principality as far back as the tenth century (A. D. 968) by the Emperor Otho I, in favour of the Grimaldi family, who were Lords of Antibes in France, and it is held in the present day by a descendant of the original grantee through the female line. In the seventeenth century the Prince of Monaco, in order to disembarass his Capital of a Spanish garrison, which had usurped possession of it at a period when the Duchy of Milan was still an appanage of the Spanish Crown, entered into a treaty with Louis XIII. of France (Convention of Peronne, 14 Sept. 1641) ²², whereby he placed himself under the protection of the King of France, who undertook thenceforth to maintain at his own charge a garrison of five hundred French soldiers in Monaco. This Treaty continued in force and operation down to 1792, when the National Convention of France incorporated the Principality of Monaco, including the three communes of Monaco, Mentone, and Roccabruna, into the French Republic, Convention of Peronne, 14th Sept. 1641.

²¹ An account of six classes of Protected States in India is given in "Sketches of the Relations subsisting between the British Government of India and the different Native States," by Captain J. Sutherland. Calcutta, 1833. British and Foreign Review (1839), vol. viii. p. 154.

²² Schmauss, Corpus Jur. Gentium Academicum, I. p. 521.

and constituted it within the Department of the Maritime Alps. By the subsequent Treaty of Paris²³ (30 May, 1814), concluded between France on the one part and Austria and her allies on the other, France renounced possession of Monaco, and the ancient relations between the Prince of Monaco and the King of France, such as they existed before 1 Jan. 1789, were recognised to be once more in force. By the subsequent Treaty of Paris²⁴, (20 Nov. 1815,) concluded between the four Allied Powers severally on the one part, and France on the other, it was declared that the relations re-established by the Treaty of 30 May, 1814, between France and the Principality of Monaco, should be at an end, and that analogous relations should thenceforth exist between that Principality and the King of Sardinia. Those relations were subsequently defined by the Treaty of Turin²⁵, (Nov. 7, 1817,) concluded between the King of Sardinia and the Prince of Monaco, almost literally in the words of the Convention of Peronne (mutatis mutandis). Thus the King of Sardinia was to maintain a garrison at his own expense in Monaco, which was to be under the command of the Prince of Monaco, as Governor for his Majesty, and the King was not to interfere with the Prince's rights of Sovereignty in other respects. The King of Sardinia undertook to defend the Prince of Monaco against foreign enemies, to include his name in all treaties of peace, and to allow him to use the Royal Standard of Sardinia in time of war. The Principality meanwhile had its own commercial flag, and Consuls were accredited by the King of Sardinia

²³ Martens, N. R. II. p. 5. tens, Nouveau Supplément, II.

²⁴ Martens, N. R. II. p. 687. p. 343.

²⁵ Articles de Protection, Mar-

Cession of Mentone and Roc-cabrina to France.

to reside at Monaco in order to watch over the commercial interests of Sardinian subjects in that port, precisely as in the ports of other Independent States. The integrity of the Principality was subsequently affected by the annexation of Mentone and Roccabruna to Piedmont in 1848, when the inhabitants of those districts, dissatisfied with the administration of the reigning Prince, voted their annexation to Piedmont. The annexation of these districts was accepted by the Sardinian Parliament and sanctioned by the King of Sardinia, whilst the Prince of Monaco recorded a protest²⁶ against the wrongful act of the Protecting Power.

The Lordship of Kniphausen.

§ 28. The Seignory or Lordship of Kniphausen stood in a more anomalous relation to the Grand Duke of Oldenburg. The State of Kniphausen had originally been a sub-feudum of the Holy Roman Empire, held mediately by its Lord through the Feudal Court of Brussels. After the Emperor of the Romans had by the Treaty of Campo Formio²⁷, (17 Oct. 1797,) renounced possession of the Belgian Provinces, known as the Austrian Low Countries, in favour of the French Republic; and after this renunciation on the part of the Emperor had been further recorded with greater formality in the Treaty of Luneville, (9 Feb. 1801²⁸,) Kniphausen was constituted an

²⁶ These districts, as forming part of the arrondissement (circondario) of Nice have since been ceded by the King of Sardinia to the Emperor of the French, under the Treaty of Turin (24 March, 1860), whilst the remainder of the Principality of Monaco still continues to be an Independent State under the Government of the Hereditary Prince Charles

III. By a subsequent Treaty concluded at Paris (Feb. 2, 1861) between the Prince of Monaco and the Emperor of the French, the Prince renounced in perpetuity all his right to the Communes of Mentone and Roccabruna.

²⁷ Martens, Recueil, VI. p. 421.

²⁸ Ibid. VII. p. 296.

immediate fief of the German Empire by the Decree of the Deputation of the Empire on 25th Feb. 1803. Upon the subsequent dissolution of the Roman Empire of the Germans in 1806, which was a necessary consequence of the Treaty of Presburg, (26 Dec. 1805,) concluded between the Emperor Francis and the Emperor Napoleon I., and which paved the way for the Confederation of the States of the Rhine, (Paris, 12 July, 1806,) the Lord of Kniphausen became an independent Sovereign Power. His independence however was of short duration. The Emperor Napoleon I. occupied the territory of Kniphausen, and subsequently transferred it under the Treaty of Tilsit to the Emperor of Russia, who ceded it to the Duke of Oldenburg. Upon the restoration of peace in 1815, when the Sovereign Princes and Free Cities of Germany, feudatories in former days of the Germanic Empire, united themselves together on a footing of equality as members of the Germanic Confederation, the Lord of Kniphausen was not admitted into the Confederation, in deference to the objections of the Emperor Alexander of Russia. Negotiations however on the subject of Kniphausen were originated at the Congress of Aix-la-Chapelle in 1818, and led to the conclusion of the Treaty of Berlin²⁹, (8 June, 1825,) between Count Bentinck of Kniphausen, and Duke Peter of Oldenburg, under the mediation of Russia, Prussia, and Austria. Under this Treaty the Count agreed that the Duke of Oldenburg should exercise over him and his family, as territorial Lords of Kniphausen, a supremacy analogous to that which had appertained to the Emperor of Germany before the dissolution of the Empire. The Seignory of Kniphausen, by virtue of this conventional subordination

Treaty of Tilsit.

Treaty of Berlin,
8 June,
1825.

²⁹ Meyer, Staats-Acten des Deutschen Bundes, II. p. 289.

of its Lord to a member of the Germanic Confederation, became appurtenant to the lands of the Confederation; and the Treaty itself was guaranteed by the Germanic Confederation in its character of an European Power (9 June, 1829). The result of these treaty-engagements was twofold. Under the Treaty of Berlin the Duke of Oldenburg was bound to discharge towards the Counts of Kniphausen duties of Protection analogous to those which the Emperor of Germany had discharged, whilst the Empire existed, towards his feudatories; whilst the Germanic Confederation was bound under the Federal Act to defend the territory of Kniphausen against foreign aggression, by virtue of its recognised subordination to a member of the Confederation. The State of Kniphausen meanwhile retained its own commercial flag, but the Duke of Oldenburg, under the ninth article of the Treaty of Berlin (8 June, 1825), was constituted the political representative of the Lord and his subjects in their relations with Foreign Powers. Augustus, the son and successor of Duke Peter of Oldenburg, assumed the title of Grand Duke on 22nd May, 1829. Having meanwhile acquired possession of the lands of the Counts of Kniphausen, which possession, however, as a matter of right was contested by the Counts Bentinck, he ceded to Prussia by a Convention, signed at Berlin on 20th July, 1853, the Sovereignty over the Bay of the Jahde, together with a border of territory on either side of the Bay, sufficient to form a naval establishment thereon, and the said territory has been subsequently united to Prussia by Letters Patent of the King of Prussia bearing date 5 November, 1857. This Cession of the Bay and the adjoining territory was made, as expressly stated in the Convention, to enable Prussia to form a harbour for ships of war, and the Jahde has now become the most important military harbour of the German Empire on the coast of the North Sea. By Article 53 of the German Constitution the harbour of Kiel in Holstein and the harbour of the Jahde are declared to be Imperial military harbours. It deserves remark that the embouchure of the Jahde was the port of correspondence between England and her German allies during the Napoleonic wars, when the ordinary channels of communication by the Weser and the Elbe were closed against England either by the police of Napoleon I. or by the frost of winter. The depth of water in the Bay of Jahde is so great that it is rarely, if ever, frozen over. The only drawback to it, as a military port, is that there is a teredo in its waters very fatal to wooden ships, of a like kind to that which is the pest of the harbour of Sebastopol in the Crimea.

§ 29. The United States of the Ionian Islands were, on the other hand, an instance of an Independent State placed by the provisions of a general treaty under the immediate and exclusive Protection of another Independent Power. The Seven Islands had formed a portion of the maritime possessions of the Republic of Venice antecedent to 1797, when they passed under the sovereignty of the French Republic. They were subsequently occupied by the joint forces of Russia and the Ottoman Porte, and were constituted under the treaty of Constantinople³⁰, (21 March, 1800,) concluded between those two Powers, tributaries of the Sultan, as their Suzerain and Protector, in like manner as the Republic of Ragusa had been an Independent State under the protection of the Sultan since the 14th century. The Seven Islands were subsequently recognised as an Independent

The United States of the Ionian Islands.

Treaty of Constantinople,
21 March,
1800.

³⁰ Martens, Recueil, VII. 41.

Treaty of Amiens.
Treaty of Tilsit.

Republic in 1802, under the Treaty of Amiens³¹. Under the secret articles of the Treaty of Tilsit, the Emperor of Russia, in contempt of his guaranty towards the Ottoman Porte, transferred the Seven Islands in full sovereignty to France. During the subsequent course of the war Great Britain acquired possession of six of the Islands, but Corfu remained in the hands of the French down to 1814, when it was ceded under the Treaty of Paris to the Four Allied Powers, and was consequently reserved for their joint disposal, in conformity with the provisions of the Treaty of Pilnitz, as an acquisition made by them in common during the war. Although, therefore, the six smaller Islands were by right of conquest at the absolute disposal of Great Britain, Corfu could only be disposed of with the common consent of the Four Allied Powers. Great Britain, as it appears from Lord Castlereagh's Memoirs³², had contemplated in 1814 that a direct Sovereignty over these Islands should be given to some acknowledged European Power, and preferred either the King of Sicily or the Emperor of Austria. On the other hand, Count Capo d'Istrias, a native of Corfu, who was in the intimate councils of the Emperor Alexander, suggested to that Sovereign that the Islands should be recognised as an Independent State, and be placed under the protection of Great Britain. The Emperor Francis repudiated altogether the notion of a strictly continental Power like Austria embarrassing itself with the charge of insular possessions. Great Britain on the other hand was extremely reluctant to accept the position of a Protecting Power³³, and at first withdrew the Six ³¹ Martens, N. R. III. p. 13.

³² Letter of Lord Castlereagh to Lord Liverpool, vol. x. p. 224.

³³ Lord Bathurst to Lord Castlereagh, vol. x. p. 441.

Islands, over which she had an absolute right of disposal, from the proposed common arrangement. Great Britain at last consented to accept the charge of Protector of all the Seven Islands at the urgent instance of the Emperor Alexander, who stated in Conference with the other Powers, that he had pledged himself that the Islands should neither be incorporated into any other State, nor become the vassals of any Suzerain, but should enjoy a constitution which would secure their material independence; and as Great Britain could alone satisfy what he considered to be a right of the Ionians, it was the duty of Great Britain to accept the government of the Seven Islands. The result was embodied in three separate Conventions of identical tenor, executed at Paris²⁴, (5 Nov. 1815,) between Great Britain and her three allies, Russia, Austria, and Prussia respectively, under which the Seven Islands were declared to form a Single Free and Independent State under the immediate and exclusive protection of the King of Great Britain and Ireland. The trading flag of the United States of the Ionian Islands was acknowledged by the contracting parties as the flag of a Free and Independent State, and none but commercial agents or consuls, subject to the regulations, to which commercial agents or consuls are subject in other Independent States, were to be accredited to the United Ionian States. All the Powers which signed the Treaty of Paris, (30 May, 1814,) and the Act of the Congress of Vienna, (9 June, 1815,) and also the King of the Two Sicilies and the Ottoman Porte,

Convention of Paris,
5 Nov.
1861.

²⁴ The Austrian Treaty is in Martens, N. R. II. p. 663, and in the British and Foreign State Papers, 1815, 1816. The Russian Treaty is in the Annual Register for 1815. The Prussian Treaty is in the Collection of Treaties, (Preussen's Staatsverträge,) published in Berlin, 1852, p. 784.

were to be invited to accede to the Conventions. The King of the Two Sicilies recognised the Protectorate of the King of Great Britain by the Convention of London ³⁵, (26 Sept. 1816,) and the Ottoman Porte by a Special Act ³⁶, (24 April, 1819,) renounced its sovereignty over the Seven Islands and their dependencies in favour of the King of Great Britain, as the Sovereign Protector of the Islands.

Neutrality
of a Protected Independent
State.

§ 30. The history of the Ionian Islands during the war of 1854-56 between Russia and the Ottoman Porte is illustrative of the practical inconvenience of adopting the epithet "Semi-Sovereign," as representing the International Status of a Conventional Independent State. The connection between the Seven Islands and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland was purely personal. The King of Great Britain and Ireland exercised authority over the Ionian States not Jure Coronæ, but simply ex Pacto; and the Ionian People were Ionian subjects, not subjects of the British Crown. The Ionian States accordingly did not necessarily follow the fortunes of the Crown of Great Britain and Ireland in war and in peace; they might remain neutral, like other independent States, whilst the Protecting Power was engaged in hostilities with other Powers, and they did not participate in the advantages of any treaty-engagements entered into by the King of Great Britain and Ireland, unless he had stipulated specially in behalf of Ionian subjects in his character of the Protecting Power of the United Ionian States. At the commencement of the war with Russia, in which France and Great Britain took part, as the allies of the Porte, the Executive Government of Great Britain, under a misapprehension that the

³⁵ Martens, *Traité*s, N. R. V. p. 116.

³⁶ Ibid. p. 387.

Protecting Power of a so-called Semi-Sovereign State had certain paramount rights of Sovereignty over it, refused to recognise the neutrality of Ionian subjects, and a decision of a British Court of the Law of Nations³⁷ was invoked on behalf of Ionian subjects to clear away the misapprehension. The classification of this order of States under the head of Conventional Independent States, as already suggested, is calculated to prevent misapprehensions of a like nature in other cases by directing attention at once to their special character. Upon the election of Prince George of Denmark to the throne of Greece, Great Britain renounced her Protectorate over the Seven Islands and their dependencies by a Treaty signed at London on 14 November, 1863, to which France was a party in addition to the Three Powers which, with Great Britain, were co-signatories of the Treaty of Paris of Nov. 15, 1815. It was further provided by this treaty that the Seven Islands upon their union with the Kingdom of Greece should enjoy the advantages of a perpetual neutrality, which the High Contracting parties engaged themselves to respect. The Union of the Islands to the Kingdom of Greece was subsequently effected with the mutual consent of the Parliament of the Ionian Islands and of the Parliament of the Kingdom of Greece.

§ 31. Much confusion of thought has arisen from a similar cause respecting the International Status of the City of Cracow and its territory. On the dissolution of the ancient kingdom of Poland, the City of Cracow and the territory assigned to it was under the Convention of St. Petersburg³⁸ (13 Oct. 1795) evacuated by the Prussian Armies, and united to the

The Free
City of Cracow.

Convention
of St. Petersburg.

³⁷ The Leucade. Admiralty Prize Cases, 1854-56, p. 217.

³⁸ Martens, Traité, R. VI. p. 171.

24 Oct.
1795.
Treaty of Vienna,
14 Oct.
1809.

Austrian Monarchy, from which it was again severed by Napoleon I, and by the subsequent Treaty of Vienna ³⁹ (14 Oct. 1809) it was attached to the Duchy of Warsaw, then belonging to the King of Saxony. This latter Duchy, being a new State created by the Emperor Napoleon I, was in fact a fourth division of the ancient Kingdom of Poland in favour of a fourth occupant. The issue of the campaign of 1812 placed the Emperor Alexander in possession of the various portions of territory, which had served by their union to make up the Duchy of Warsaw, and which were subsequently redistributed between Russia, Austria, and Prussia, under two separate treaties, concluded between Russia and the two other Powers respectively at Vienna (3 May, 1815 ⁴⁰). An additional treaty ⁴¹ of the same date, concluded between the three Powers, provided that the City of Cracow with its territory should be regarded (sera envisagée) for ever, as a free, independent, and strictly neutral city, under the protection of the three High Contracting Powers. The Three Courts under the sixth article engaged themselves to respect, and cause to be respected on all occasions, the neutrality of the Free City of Cracow and its territory. An armed force was not to be introduced into it upon any pretext whatever at any time. In return, it was understood, and expressly stipulated, that there should not be granted within the Free City or upon the territory of Cracow any asylum or protection to fugitives from justice, or to deserters from the dominions of any of the Three Contracting Powers, but that such persons should be immediately surrendered upon a demand of extradition made by the competent authorities. It was

Treaties of Vienna,
3 May,
1815.

³⁹ Martens, *Traité*s, N. R. I. p. 211.

⁴⁰ Ibid. N. R. II. p. 225.

⁴¹ Ibid. p. 251.

further provided, that the City of Cracow should not have the right of levying custom duties, but only pontage and road tolls upon the transit of goods and cattle, according to a tariff regulated by the Commissioners of the Three Powers. The other Articles of the Treaty regulated the political constitution of the Free City, and settled various matters of civil and ecclesiastical administration. A further Treaty between the Three Allied Powers of the same date completed their mutual engagements in relation to the Duchy of Warsaw and the various territories which had made up the ancient Kingdom of Poland, as it existed in 1772. Under this Treaty, each of the Contracting Parties was to be at liberty to establish Consuls or Commercial Agents in respect to the Duchy of Warsaw, subject to the usual recognition under the Constitution as approved by the Three Powers; but no similar provision is found in the Treaty relative to Cracow, and the omission of all provision in regard to Consuls or Commercial Agents is an important peculiarity in that Treaty.

§ 32. The Internal Government of the Free City of Cracow and its territory was to reside in a Senate consisting of Twelve Senators and a President. The Legislative Power was committed to the Senate and an Assembly of Representatives, the latter body having the right of controlling the administration by examining the accounts, voting the budget, and impeaching the public functionaries, if suspected of peculation. The Peace of the City and the Police of the Roads was to be maintained by a civic militia. This Constitution was annexed to the Treaty, which placed it formally under the common guaranty of the Three Contracting Powers. It has been a matter of subsequent diplomatic discussion, upon what principle

Its Internal Constitution a subject of Treaty.

Principal Act of the Congress of Vienna.

the European Powers, which took part in the Congress of Vienna, acted in admitting this Treaty between the Three Powers to be inserted in the text of the Principal Act of the Congress. A slight modification was made in the language of the Article respecting the City of Cracow and its territory as inserted in the Principal Act, namely, the City of Cracow is declared (est déclarée instead of sera envisagée) to be for ever a free and independent and strictly neutral City under the protection of Russia, Austria, and Prussia. With this exception, the language of the Article in the Triple Treaty and in the Act of the Congress is identical. It is known that the introduction of the provisions of the Triple Treaty into the General Act of the Congress was objected to by Austria, as devoid of political meaning, and as inconsistent with the intention of the Protectorate, and that the Emperor Francis reluctantly admitted its insertion in deference to the reiterated instances of the Emperor Alexander. It was subsequently maintained on behalf of the Three Courts⁴², when their common intention to suppress the independent existence of Cracow was announced to France and Great Britain in 1846, "that they had merely presented to the Congress of Vienna, for registration in the General Instrument termed the Principal Act of the Congress, the Convention which they had concluded with one another, and that the other Powers, who signed the Principal Act of the Congress, or the General Treaty, did no more than receive that combination, as the result of the direct negotiations between the Three Courts, without interfering in that territorial arrangement to which they

View of the Three Courts as to the Suppression of Cracow in 1846.

⁴² Despatch of Prince Met- 6 Nov. 1846. Martens, N. R.
ternich to Count Dietrichstein, Gen. T. X. p. 55.

were strangers." France⁴³, however, in reply, denied that the Independent Powers, who signed the Principal Act, merely registered the decisions and acts of the Three Powers who were Parties to the Triple Treaty, and contended that the foundation of the Republic of Cracow was placed in the same rank with the stipulations which formed other States, established Kingdoms, recognised the Free Cities of Germany, created the Germanic Confederation; and that the virtual insertion of the Triple Treaty textually in the General Act was intended to give to the existence of the Republic of Cracow much stronger and more authentic guaranties; and accordingly that all the Powers, which were Parties to the Treaty of Vienna, had an incontestable right to take part in the deliberations and decisions, of which the Republic of Cracow might be the object. Great Britain⁴⁴, to the same effect, asserted, that, with whomsoever might have originated the plan of erecting Cracow and its territory into a Free and Independent State, that plan was carried into effect by stipulations, to which all the Powers were equally parties, and consequently it was not competent for three of those Powers by their own separate authority to undo that, which was established by the common engagements of the whole. The Three Powers, on the other hand, conceived themselves at liberty to modify or annul the Triple Treaty, and to stipulate other conditions by free and reciprocal agreement. They accordingly agreed, that, as the Protected State had violated the obligation of neutrality imposed upon it as a condition of its exist-

French view.British view.

⁴³ Note of M. Guizot addressed to Count Flahaut in reply to the Despatch of Prince Metternich, 4 Dec. 1846. Martens, N. R. Gen. T. X. p. 118.

⁴⁴ Despatch of Lord Palmerston to Lord Ponsonby, 23 Nov. 1846. Martens, N. R. Gen. T. X. p. 110.

ence under the Triple Treaty, they were not merely at liberty, but were bound in self-defence to declare the Triple Treaty to be at an end; and as the Protected State had destroyed by its own act the work which the Protecting Powers had founded, they were not bound to re-establish it, but might allow the state of Possession anterior to 1809 to revive. The Two Western Powers, on the contrary, protested formally against the suppression of the Republic of Cracow, as at variance with the letter as well as with the spirit of the General Treaty of Vienna, and as in their opinion not warranted by any adequate necessity.

Cracow
and the Ionian
Islands.

§ 33. It is not easy to understand in what peculiar circumstances certain distinguished publicists⁴⁶ have discovered so wide a distinction between the Free and Independent City of Cracow, under the joint Protectorate of the Three Powers, and the Free and Independent State of the United Ionian Islands under the sole and exclusive Protection of Great Britain, as to declare that the former was to be regarded as a completely Sovereign State, whilst the latter had undergone a material abridgement both in its Internal and External Sovereignty. As far as External Sovereignty was concerned, no European Power could place itself in connection with the State of Cracow, politically represented as it was under the General Treaty of Vienna by the Three Powers, except through the medium of one of the Three Courts: in a similar manner, it was only through one of the Three Courts that the State of Cracow could address itself to Foreign Governments; and the triple Protectorate was as exclusive in the case of Cracow, as the single Protectorate in the case of the Ionian Islands. If a careful comparison is instituted between the condition of the United Ionian Islands, and the condition of the Free City of Cracow, it will be seen that the Ionian Islands enjoyed far more of the rights which pertain to an Independent State, than the Free City of Cracow. The latter State was by the Triple Treaty declared not to have the power to levy any custom duties; whereas the Ionian Parliament had full power to impose custom duties upon imports and exports, as well as to levy other taxes. Cracow had neither a commercial flag by treaty nor commercial agents in foreign countries, whilst the Ionian Nation had both; and the Lord High Commissioner, although he was nominated by the Protecting Power, did not exercise his authority according to the behests of the Protecting Power, but according to the Constitutional law of the Ionian States, being in fact not a British, but an Ionian authority.

⁴⁶ Martens, L. I. c. 11. § 20. Wheaton's Elements, Part I. c. 11. § 13.

§ 34. The Republic of Poglizza, in Dalmatia, has been cited by Martens⁴⁶, and on his authority by Wheaton, as an existing instance of a Semi-Sovereign State under the protection of Austria. Poglizza, however, ceased to exist as an Independent State in 1807, on the occupation of Dalmatia by the French armies. The origin of this Republic, the name of which signified "a small field," dated from a period antecedent to the Ottoman invasion of Europe. It consisted of twelve towns or villages, with a population of about 4000 souls, and a territory of about forty Italian miles in circumference, the capital of which was Gatta, where the Velisbor, or Great Council, was held. Their first rights were granted to them by the Kings of Hungary, and the same were subsequently confirmed to them by the Republic of St.

The extinct Republic of Poglizza.

⁴⁶ Précis du Droit des Gens, LI. c. 2. § 12.

Mark, to which they became tributary and furnished mercenary troops, obtaining from the Venetians certain advantages in return. Upon the suppression of the Venetian State by the Emperor Napoleon I, Poglizza passed under the Protection of Austria, and continued in the enjoyment of its Independence, until it was destroyed amidst the conflicts between the Russian forces under Siniavin and the French armies under Marmont ⁴⁷.

The Republic of Andorre.

§ 35. Andorre is a small Republic, situated between the Pyrenees of Arriège in France and the Pyrenees of Catalonia in Spain. It has been classed by some writers amongst neutral Independent States, but its proper place is amongst protected Independent States. Its independence dates from the reign of the Emperor Louis le Débonnaire, who by a Charter issued in the year 801, and still preserved in the Archives of the Republic, constituted the People of Andorre an Independent State, with liberty to elect a Count as their Protector. They accordingly chose for their Protectors the neighbouring Counts of Foix. The Emperor Charlemagne had, prior to the Charter of his son Louis le Débonnaire, granted the tithes of the six parishes, which make up the Republic of Andorre, to the See of Urgel in Catalonia, but he had granted at the same time to their inhabitants a distinct military organization. His grandson, Charles the Bald, disregarding the Charter of Louis le Débonnaire, issued, in the year 860, a Diploma, whereby the Sovereignty over Andorre was assigned to the Bishops of Urgel. This wrongful act gave rise to a war between the Bishops of Urgel and the State of Andorre, which lasted for a period of four hundred years, and in which the Counts of Foix took part as Protectors of the Republic. Hostilities were at length brought to a close by a Treaty, under which the Bishops of Urgel and the Counts of Foix were recognised as joint Suzerains over Andorre. This joint Suzerainty, however, had in course of time become converted into a joint Protectorate, and the Protectorate exercised by the Counts of Foix had devolved to the French branch of the House of Bourbon⁴⁸. On the abdication, however, of King Charles X, the last King of France, it was exercised by his successor, Louis Philippe, as King of the French. Since the abdication of the latter Monarch it has been exercised by Napoleon III as Emperor of the French, and subsequently by the President of the French Republic. The Chief of the French State and the Spanish Bishop of Urgel would thus appear to be joint Protectors of the Republic of Andorre under the title of Co-Principes. The Val d'Andorre forms part of the frontier between Spain and France. In the civil war, during which Don Carlos disputed the new order of succession to the Crown of Spain, which had been established by King Ferdinand VII in favour of his daughter, who succeeded to him under the title of Queen Isabella II, Andorre claimed to be independent and neutral, and concluded a convention of neutrality with the Queen's Government (22 December, 1834⁴⁹). Its territory is about thirty miles in length and twenty miles in breadth, divided into six parishes, and the Republic is governed by a Domestic Executive, which is annually elected by a General Council consisting of twenty-four Consuls ⁴⁸ The family of the Counts of Foix became absorbed into the House of Bourbon.

⁴⁷ Mémoires du Maréchal Duc de Raguse, III. p. 49. Sir Gardner Wilkinson's Dalmatia and Montenegro, II. p. 195.

⁴⁹ British and Foreign State Papers, vol. xxx. p. 1217.

of Bearn in its turn was absorbed or Delegates elected by the six parishes. The two Syndics or Presidents are the representatives of the Republic in all external matters⁵⁰. The population is estimated at between eight and ten thousand, and an armed force of full fifteen hundred men is always ready to defend the independence of the Country.

The Republic of San Marino.

§ 36. San Marino was an instance of an Independent Republic under the Protection of the Holy See, and surrounded, until very recent times, by the dominions of the Protecting Power. Tradition refers its origin to the fifth century. The extent of its territory and the number of its population are nearly equal to those of the Republic of Andorre, but it has not a like military organization, the armed force of the State consisting of only about eighty men. Its independence was for a short time in the last century suspended by Cardinal Alberoni, but it subsequently recovered its ancient liberties, and the Emperor Napoleon I. formally recognised its Independence, when he entered the Papal Dominions in 1797. It is governed by a Domestic Executive, consisting of two Capitani Regenti, who are elected for six months by an Executive Council of Twelve, the members of which are themselves popularly elected. Since the States of the Church have become an integral portion of the Kingdom of Italy, San Marino has passed under the protection of the King of Italy, and by a Convention signed at Turin on 22 March, 1862, its ancient liberty and independence have been recognised by the Protecting Power. This International Atom may fitly close the series of *protected Independent States*⁵¹.

⁵⁰ Historia de la Republica d' Andorra. Barcelona, 1848. The Edinburgh Review, No. 230.

⁵¹ This State is styled by Italian writers, La Republichetta. Gunther, Europäisches Völkerrecht, Tom. I. c. 1. § 19.

CHAPTER III.

NATIONAL STATE-SYSTEMS OF CHRISTENDOM.

Single or United States—Personal Union of Independent States—Real Union of Independent States—Federal Union of Norway and Sweden—Diversity of Federal Unions—The United States of America—The Constitution of 1787—The Articles of Confederation of 1778—The Argentine Confederation—A Single State decentralized—The Constitution of the Argentine State—The Argentine Provinces—The Swiss Confederation of 1648—The Helvetic Confederation of 1815—The League of Sarnen of 1832—The Swiss Confederation of 1874—Analogy between the Swiss Confederation and certain Federal Unions—Origin of the Germanic Confederation—Federal Act of 1815—Final Act of 1820—The Ordinary Assembly of the Diet—The Plenum or Full Chapter of the Diet—Permanent Character of the Germanic Confederation—Constitution of the German Empire of 1871.

§ 37. A NATION may be either a single Independent State, or an Independent System of States¹ united together by a federal compact, the conditions of which are susceptible of infinite variations. Thus a System of States may be federally united under an hereditary prince, or under an elective President, or under a representative Council, and in each of these cases the National Unity of the System may be as complete as in the case of a single Independent State. It is of importance, however, not to confound a Political Body of States, incorporated together Jure Imperii under a common Sovereign Prince, with a Federal System of States² united together Jure Societatis, which has been, as such, the subject of International recognition. The internal constitution of a Political Body of States is altogether ignored by the Law of Nations, whereas the internal organization of a Federal System of States is the result of an International Compact; and whilst the external relations of the former Body towards Foreign Nations are of a normal kind, and are governed by the Common Law of Nations, the external relations of the latter System are of an exceptional character, and are the creatures altogether of Conventional Law.

¹ Puffendorf, L. VII. c. 5. σύνθημα quoddam, ut Strabo non uno loco loquitur, neque tamen

² Sic etiam accidere potest, ut plures civitates arctissimo inter se fœdere colligentur et faciant Civitatis retinere. Grotius, L. I. c. 3. § 7.

Personal
Union of Independent States.

§ 38. Two or more Independent States may be connected together by the link of a common Sovereign Prince under the Civil Law of the respective States. Such a connection has no International significance, inasmuch as each State retains its separate National Character. Where such a connection is of an accidental and temporary character, it has been termed by publicists a Personal Union; where it is of a necessary and permanent character, it has been designated a Real Union. This classification, however, is open to objection, seeing that in both cases the person of the Sovereign is the only link which connects the States; and as there is nothing in the nature of these Unions which implies Reality in an International sense, it would seem preferable to define such Unions in all cases as Personal Unions, and to distinguish them, according to their essential difference, into temporary and permanent Unions³. Thus the connection of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland with the Kingdom of Hanover by the link of a common

Great Britain and Hanover.

³ Klüber, Tom. I. § 27. in a note upon States united under the same Sovereign, says, Unio civitatum, sive perpetua sit, sive temporaria, fit jure (1) vel socie-

tatis (systema civitatum fœderatarum) (2) vel imperii (sub eodem imperante). Hæc est vel personalis vel realis.

Sovereign Prince during the reign of five successive monarchs of the House of Hanover, was a Personal Union of an accidental kind, depending upon the coincidence of the two Crowns devolving upon one and the same person under the Civil Law of Succession in either Kingdom; whilst the connection of the Kingdom of Hungary with the Germanic States of the House of Hapsburg-Lorraine, under one and the same Sovereign Prince, is a Personal Union of a permanent character, inasmuch as the Act of Settlement of the Crown of Hungary (anno 1723), by extending the Order of Succession to the female descendants of Rodolph of Hapsburg, has made the Law of Succession in Hungary identical with the Law of Succession in the Germanic States of the House of Hapsburg-Lorraine, so that both Crowns devolve inseparably upon one and the same person. But in either case the Personal Union of the two Crowns had no Real International significance. The Hungarian Nation before 1867 did not necessarily follow in peace and war the fortunes of the Germanic States of the House of Hapsburg-Lorraine, and the Emperor of Austria might enter into an international compact, to which he was not a party as King of Hungary. On the other hand, the Union of the Empire of Austria with the Kingdom of Hungary, since the withdrawal of Austria from the Germanic Confederation of States, has more the character of a real Union under the Constitution of 1867, inasmuch as the foreign relations of both countries are now directed by one and the same Minister of Foreign Affairs.

§ 39. There is another kind of Union of Independent States under one and the same Sovereign Prince, which has an International significance, and may deserve, in a Treatise on the Law of Nations, to

Hungary
and the Austrian Germanic States.

Real
Union of Independent States.

be termed a Real Union, in contradistinction to the Personal Unions which have just been noticed. Thus, the States which are under the sceptre of the Head of the House of Hapsburg-Lorraine may be divided into Germanic and non-Germanic States. The Germanic States of Austria before 1867 formed part of the territory of the Germanic Confederation; they at the same time formed part of the Austrian Empire, and their twofold National character was the subject of International recognition. In a similar manner the Germanic States of the Head of the House of Hohenzollern formed part of the territory of the Germanic Confederation, and at the same time formed part of the Prussian Monarchy. The Duchies of Holstein and Lauenburg were, in an analogous manner, on the one hand States of the Germanic Confederation, and on the other hand parts of the Danish Monarchy⁴. German publicists have accordingly adopted a special term to distinguish in such cases the Whole or Entire Independent State. Thus the Prussian Monarchy, as distinguished from the Germanic and non-Germanic States which compose it, is styled a Gesammstaat, or Whole-State. The King of Prussia, for

Gesammstaat or Whole-
State.

⁴ Great changes, however, have taken place in the international relations of the Elbe Duchies. The King of Denmark renounced all his rights over the Duchies of Holstein and of Lauenburg by the Treaty of Vienna, 30 Oct. 1864, in favour of the King of Prussia and of the Emperor of Austria. By the Treaty of Gastein, 14 Aug. 1865, Austria ceded to Prussia all her rights over the Duchy of Lauenburg, and by a subsequent treaty signed at Prague 23 August, 1866, Austria ceded definitively to Prussia all her rights over Holstein. Prussia has subsequently entered, with the vote of Holstein, into a new Confederation which bears the name of the German Empire, but the King of Prussia has not entered into the new Confederation with his non-German dominions. The Prussian Gesammstaat still exists as distinguished from those States of Prussia which are members of the new German Empire.

instance, may enter into treaty-engagements on behalf of the Gesammstaat or entire Prussian Monarchy; or on behalf of the Germanic portion of it, or on behalf of the non-Germanic portion of it. So likewise the King of Denmark might formerly have entered into treaty-engagements on behalf of the Gesammstaat or entire Danish Monarchy, which included the two Germanic Duchies, or on behalf of the Germanic Duchies alone, or on behalf of the Danish Provinces alone. These very complicated conditions of International Life were peculiar to certain States which were members of the Germanic Confederation; the Constitution of which was recognised in the Final Act of the Congress of Vienna. The Kingdom of Holland supplied an instance of either kind of Union with a State of that Confederation. There was a Real Union between the Kingdom of Holland and the Duchy of Limburg, whilst the person of the Sovereign was the only link which united that Kingdom to the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg⁶. Limburg, on the other hand, formed part of the Dutch Monarchy, whilst Luxemburg was as distinct from Holland, as Hanover was from Great Britain during the time when both States were subject to a common Sovereign Prince.

§ 40. The Union of the Kingdom of Norway and the Kingdom of Sweden comes under different considerations of Public Law. The kingdom of Norway had been politically united with the kingdom of Sweden and with the kingdom of Denmark since the

Federal
Union of Norway and Sweden.

⁶ Since the dissolution of the Germanic Confederation of 1815 the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg has become a Separate State under the Sovereignty of the King-Grand Duke, his descendants and successors, and it does not follow the fortunes in peace and war of any other State. It has also been declared by an European Act to form henceforth a perpetually neutral State.

Union of Calmar (anno 1397⁶). That Union was dissolved de facto in the early part of the sixteenth century, when Gustavus Vasa re-established the political Independence of Sweden, and founded a separate dynasty (anno 1523). The Independence of Sweden was formally recognised by Denmark at the peace of Stettin (anno 1570). Norway had meanwhile undergone a political change, and had become a province of Denmark (anno 1536), when its Senate was suppressed, and its Estates ceased to take part in the election of its Kings. Norway and Denmark thenceforth formed a single Independent State for all International purposes; the King of Denmark being recognised Internationally as King of Denmark and Norway. Such was the condition of Norway until the last year of the War of Liberation, when the King of Denmark by the Treaty of Kiel⁷, (14 Jan. 1814,) to which Great Britain and Russia were also parties, ceded all his rights of Sovereignty over the kingdom of Norway to the King of Sweden, so "that Norway and its Dependencies should be a kingdom united to that of Sweden." This International settlement was at first repudiated by the Norwegian people, but it was ultimately carried into effect by a Convention⁸ concluded at Moss, (14 August, 1814,) between the King of Sweden and the Norwegian Government. The Constitutional relations between the two kingdoms were subsequently settled by an Act⁹,

Treaty of Kiel, 14
Jan. 1814.

* The monarchy in each kingdom had been an elective monarchy, prior to the Union of Calmar. Under the Act of Union the United monarchy was constituted an elective monarchy, and the monarch was to be elected by the common accord of the Senators, and the deputies of the three Kingdoms. Koch, Tableau des Révolutions, T. I. p. 274.

⁷ Martens, N. R. I. p. 666.

⁸ Martens, N. R. II. p. 62.

⁹ Acte dressé en commun par la Diète de Norwège et la Diète de drawn up in common by the Diet of Norway and the Diet of Sweden ; by which it was provided that the kingdom of Norway should form a Free and Independent kingdom, united to Sweden under the sceptre of one and the same monarch, each kingdom retaining its own Civil system, but both kingdoms having one and the same International system. Accordingly the King has full power on behalf of both kingdoms to declare war, make peace, conclude alliances, and accredit and receive Ministers Plenipotentiary, and has in all matters of war and peace the aid of an extraordinary Council of State, composed of Norwegians and Swedes in common. Meanwhile, each kingdom has its special Commercial Flag, and since 1844 has a special ensign for its military marine, but both such ensigns are acknowledged by Foreign Nations as of identical International import. The Union of Norway and Sweden, if carefully examined, will be found to be a Federal Union based upon a compact between the Norwegian and Swedish Nations. It is classed however by Wheaton under the head of personal Unions, and Sir Robert Phillimore adopts the same order of classification, and cites Norway and Sweden by the side of Great Britain and Hanover, and by the side of Prussia and Neuchatel, as affording an example of a personal Union. Klüber, on the other hand, and Heffter and Bluntschli¹⁰, class the Union of Norway and Sweden under the head of Real Unions. Klüber ranks it in the same category with the Union of Poland and Russia, which was recognised in Art. I. of the Final Act¹¹ of the Congress of Vienna, and with the Union of the two Sicilies under the Royal Proclamation of 12 Dec. 1816¹², in pursuance of a previous recognition of the Title of Ferdinard IV, as king of the Two Sicilies, in Art. CIV. of the Final Act. The true characteristic of a Personal Union seems to have been pointed out by Grotius, when he says, that upon the extinction of the reigning house the empire reverts separately to each people¹³. He might have added, that a like separation of the Kingdoms would ensue, if the succession to the respective Crowns should diverge to different members of the reigning House. Such was the result in the instance of Great Britain and Hanover, upon the death of King William IV, when the British Crown, by virtue of British Law, passed to the heir general, and the Hanoverian Crown, by virtue of Hanoverian Law, remained with the heir male of George III. Such a result however cannot arise in the case of Norway and Sweden, as there is an express provision in the Constitutional Act for maintaining the United Monarchy by the election of a new Common Dynasty, if the reigning Prince should at any time be without presumptive heirs, or if the two thrones should become actually vacant. It is apparent, therefore, that the Union of Sweden and Norway is very different from a Personal Union. On the other hand, it is not identical with the Real Union, which exists between the Independent States which compose a Gesammstaat, as Norway has not any International existence apart from Sweden, whereas the Independent States, which compose a ¹² Martens, tom. IV. p. 275.

Suède pour fixer les rapports constitutionnels entre les deux Royaumes, signé à Christiania le 31 Juillet et à Stockholm le 6 Août 1815. Martens, N. R. II. p. 608.

¹⁰ Klüber, § 27. Heffter, § 26. Bluntschli, § 75.

¹¹ Martens, N. R. tom. II. p. 383.

¹³ Grotius, L. I. c. 3. § 7. 2.
Extincta domo regnatrice, impe-rium ad quemque populum seorsim revertitur.

Gesammstaat, enjoy both a separate and a common International existence.

§ 41. The Union of Norway and Sweden is perhaps almost a solitary instance of a Federal Union under an hereditary Sovereign Prince. The United States of America and the Argentine¹⁴ Confederation are instances of Federal Unions under an Elective President. In the former case, the President is elected for four years, and is immediately re-eligible; in the latter case, he is elected for six years, and cannot be elected a second time until an intervening period of six years has elapsed. The Helvetic Confederation, on the other hand, under the Constitution of 1815¹⁵, was an instance of a Federal Union under the direction of a Representative Council; under its present Constitution, which bears date 29 May, 1874, it ranks in the same class with the United States of America, but the President is elected for one year only, and is not re-eligible until after an interval of one year¹⁶. Both the Argentine and the Swiss Confederations, although so styled, are strictly speaking Federal Unions equally with the United States of America and the kingdoms of Norway and Sweden. The Germanic Confederation of 1815, on the other hand, although it was an Independent System of States under the direction of a Representative Council, differed so essentially from all other Systems of identical import in the circumstance that the States of the Confederation enjoyed severally a separate Nationality, notwithstanding that they participated in a common German Nationality, that it deserves to be classed in a separate category.

Diversity of Federal Unions.

¹⁴ So called from the Rio de la Plata, which intersects it.

¹⁵ Martens, N. R. IV. p. 173.

¹⁶ Constitution Fédérale pour la Confédération Suisse, article

86.

The United States of America.

§ 42. A Confederation of four Colonies, under the title of the United Colonies of New England, (anno 1643,) was the first germ of Union amongst the British Settlements in North America. The subsequent war between Great Britain and France led to a more extensive Confederacy, (anno 1754,) which was to embrace all the then existing British Colonies from New Hampshire to Georgia; but it was at that time supposed that a Federal Union of the Colonies was impracticable. Subsequent disputes with the British government led to a more close association amongst thirteen Colonies, which ultimately declared themselves to be independent of the Mother Country, and agreed to certain "Articles of Confederation and perpetual Union" (15 Nov. 1777¹⁷). This Confederacy was directed in its external relations by a Congress composed of Delegates from each State, and by the ninth of the Articles, subsequently agreed upon at Philadelphia, on 9th July, 1778¹⁸, it was provided, that the United States in Congress assembled should have the sole and exclusive right and power of determining on peace and war, except in cases¹⁹ mentioned in the ninth article; of sending and receiving ambassadors; of entering into treaties and alliances; of establishing rules for deciding in all cases what captures on land or water should be legal; and of appointing Courts for the trial of piracies and felonies committed on the high seas. The Congress was thus charged with executive functions on behalf of all the United States in International matters, and upon

Articles of Confederation,
15
Nov. 1777.

¹⁷ The American's Own Book, or the Constitutions of the several States in the Union, by J. R. Bigelow. New York, 1848.

¹⁸ Ibid.

¹⁹ Cases of emergency, where a State was actually invaded by enemies, or the danger of invasion was so imminent, as not to admit of delay, until the United States in Congress assembled could be consulted.

see also Sec. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16

the recognition of the Independence of the Confederation by Foreign Powers, the Congress took its place as a National Authority, and was acknowledged to be the representative of the United States of North America in their intercourse with other Nations.

§ 43. The Confederation of 1777 gave place to the more perfect Union of 1787²⁰, of which the distinguishing features were the consolidation of the Executive Power in the hands of a President, who was to be chosen by electors appointed by each State, and the erection of one Supreme National Judiciary. The Constitutional Act, agreed to in Congress on 28th Sept. 1787, and subsequently ratified by State Conventions held in each of the thirteen States of the Union, declared that the object of the people of the United States is "to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defence, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to themselves and their posterity." The Congress of the United States was henceforth to consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives, and it has power to provide, amongst other things, for the common defence and general welfare of the United States; to regulate commerce with Foreign Nations; to define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, and offences against the Law of Nations; to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water; to raise and support armies; to provide and maintain a navy; to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces; to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the Laws of the Union; to suppress insurrections and repel invasions. The President, on the other hand, is the organ of the Union in its intercourse with Foreign Powers. He has authority to make treaties and to appoint Ambassadors and Consuls; and although he is bound on such occasions to take the advice and obtain the consent of the Senate, this is a regulation of domestic policy, with which Foreign Nations are not concerned, as they can only communicate with the President. No State of the Union can enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation, nor can any State without the consent of the Congress lay any duty on tonnage, keep troops or ships of war in time of peace, enter into any agreement or compact with another State of the Union or with a Foreign Power, or engage in war unless actually invaded, or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay.

Constitution of 1787.

²⁰ Martens, Recueil, T. iv. p. 2 88. The American's Own Book, p. 9.

Articles of Confederation
of 1778.

§ 44. It had been provided, by the Second of the Articles of Confederation of 1778, that each State was to retain its Sovereignty, Freedom, and Independence, and every power, jurisdiction, and right which was not expressly delegated to the United States in Congress assembled. With regard to the Sovereignty of each State, it is not within the scope of a treatise on the Law of Nations to examine in what respects and to what extent that Sovereignty has been controlled or modified by the subsequent Constitution of 1787; but with regard to the Independence of the several States it may be observed, that the exercise of all those functions which characterise an Independent State, has been delegated by the respective States to the Federal Government, and the National character of each State is so far merged in the National character of the Union. Hence the Federal Government alone maintains international relations with Foreign Powers, and the Federal Union alone can acquire territory either by occupation or by cession, there being an express provision in the Constitution of the Union that new States may be admitted by Congress into the Union. The Federal Government has power to form and erect into a New State any territory, which the Federal Union may acquire. Thus Louisiana was ceded by France to the United States under the Treaty of 1803, and the Floridas were similarly ceded by Spain in 1829; and the ceded territory in each case was formed into a new State, and admitted in that character into the Union. On the other hand, where an Independent State has joined the Union, a treaty has not been required as a condition precedent to its admission into the Union. Thus Texas had been recognised as an Independent State by the United States, as well as by other Foreign Powers, antecedently to 1844. In that year a Treaty, previously negotiated between Texas and the United States for the admission of Texas into the Union, did not receive the ratification of the American Senate, and it accordingly remained inoperative ²¹. The Congress, however, resolved that the territory of Texas might be erected into a State with a Republican Form of Government, and thereupon be admitted as a new State into the Union, in accordance with the Third Section of the Fourth Article of the Constitution ²².

Cession of Louisiana and of the Floridas.

§ 45. The Spanish Provinces on the banks of the Rio de la Plata, in South America, had previously to their separation from the Mother Country been under the Government of a Colonial Viceroy. Upon the

The Argentine Confederation.

²¹ Wheaton's Elements, Sixth Edition, p. 78.

²² Under this article the Congress has power only limited by its discretion to admit as many

New States into the Union as it may think proper, in whatever manner the territory comprising those New States may have been acquired.

successful issue of the Insurrection against Spain and the Proclamation of the Sovereignty of the Argentine People, the revolted Provinces constituted themselves a Republic, under the title of the Argentine Confederation. Discord and civil war subsequently broke out between Buenos Ayres and the other Provinces, and, after a contest of fourteen years' duration, a Federal Constitution was drawn up in May, 1853, to which thirteen of the Provinces adhered, whilst Buenos Ayres preferred to stand aloof, and to frame for herself a Constitution, as a separate State²³. The existing Argentine Confederation, therefore, may be said to date from the year 1853, when the Representatives of the People of the Confederation, assembled in General Congress, decreed and established a Constitution, as recited in the Preamble, with a view to constitute a National Union amongst themselves, to consolidate internal peace, to provide for the common defence, and to secure the liberty of all the inhabitants of the Argentine Soil. The thirteen Provinces, which composed at such time the Argentine State, are Cordova, Catamarca, Corrientes, Entre-Rios, Jujuy Mendoza, Rioja, Salta, Santiago, San Juan, Santa Fé, San Luis, and Tucuman.

The Argentine Confederation a Single State decentralised.

§ 46. The Argentine Confederation has many features in common with the United States of North America; but it has remarkable features of difference, which are attributable to the fact, that the starting point of the Argentine Confederation was diametrically opposite to that of the United States of North America, the former Confederation resulting from the

²³ By a Treaty signed Nov. 10, 1859, Buenos Ayres declared herself to be once more an integral part of the Argentine Confederation. Provision had been made in the Constitution of 1853 for the admission of Buenos Ayres, since which event the internal constitution of the Confederation has been slightly reformed in 1860.

Decentralisation of a Single State²⁴, whilst the latter arose out of the Union of several States, which had been and might have continued to exist singly as Independent States. The Argentine Constitution of 1853, accordingly, in regard to the external relations of the Confederation, has only confirmed the original Unity of the Argentine State, at the same time that it has altogether decentralised its Internal Government, and has resolved it into a system of Confederate Provinces, which severally possess all the powers of Sovereignty, which are not delegated by the Constitution to the Federal Government²⁵. The National Unity, however, of the System, as regards Foreign Powers, is not thereby impaired, and the latter consequently can, under no pretext whatever, entertain direct International Relations with the Provinces without assailing the Nationality of the Argentine State and violating the Independence of the Argentine Nation²⁶.

§ 47. The Executive Power of the Argentine Nation is vested in a President, who is entitled "The President of the Argentine Confederation," and the direction of the International Relations of the Confederation are vested in him conjointly with the Senate. He declares war and peace, nominates and recalls Ambassadors and Consuls, concludes and signs all treaties

The Constitution of the Argentine State.

²⁴ We find accordingly that the Argentine Confederation is composed of Provinces and not of States, and that the object of the Confederation is declared to be, amongst other things, to provide for the common defence, and maintain the liberty of all persons who may be disposed to inhabit the Argentine soil, la liberté pour tous les hommes du monde qui voudraient habiter le sol Argentin.

La Constitution de la Confédération Argentine. Bruxelles, 1856.

²⁵ Article 101. Les Provinces conservent tout le pouvoir non délégué par cette constitution au gouvernement fédéral.

²⁶ The Provinces may conclude mutual Conventions with one another upon matters of Police, Public Works, and the Administration of Justice, subject to the sanction of the Federal Congress.

of peace, commerce, navigation, alliance, boundaries and neutrality, all Concordats and other Treaties which may be necessary to maintain friendly relations with Foreign Powers, whose Ministers he receives, and to whose Consuls he grants the Exequatur. The President exercises these latter functions subject to the approval of a Congress, which consists of two Chambers, one composed of "Deputies of the Nation," and the other of "Senators of the Provinces and of the Capital." The Chamber of Deputies consists of Representatives directly elected by the People of the Provinces and of the Capital, considered for this purpose as electoral districts of a single State, in the proportion of one deputy for every 20,000 inhabitants. Each deputy may sit for four years, and he is then re-eligible, but half the members of the Chamber are renewed every two years. The Senate is composed of two Senators from each Province and two from the Capital; each Senator may sit for nine years, and is immediately re-eligible, but a third of the Senate is renewed every three years. The approval of the Congress, which is required by the Constitution to give perfect validity to the acts of the President, is an arrangement of domestic policy, analogous to the arrangements under which the approval of the British Parliament is required by the Constitution to enable the Crown to give effect to treaties of commerce concluded with Foreign Powers.

The Argentine Provinces.

§ 48. The Provinces which compose the Argentine State are expressly prohibited by the Constitution from exercising any of the powers which are delegated to the Confederation. They may not conclude any treaties of a political character, or pass any laws affecting commerce or navigation, or establish any Custom Houses, or levy any troops, or arm any ships of war, except on occasions of sudden invasion when delay is inadmissible, and in which case they must make an immediate report to the Federal Government; nor may they nominate abroad, or receive at home, Foreign Agents. The Provincial Institutions are cast in a Republican mould, and each Province elects its own Governor, but the Governors of the Provinces upon their election become not merely local Functionaries, but are the constituted Agents of the Federal Government in enforcing the Laws of the Confederation. No Province is allowed by the Constitution to declare or make war upon another Province, and a Supreme Court of Justice, modelled after that of the North American Union, has authority to hear and redress all matters and complaints between Province and Province.

§ 49. The Swiss Confederation, in the earliest form in which its Independence was recognised by a Public Act of the European Powers (anno 1648), consisted of thirteen Cantons, Glaris, Schwytz, Uri, Zug, Unterwald, and Appenzell, the political Constitutions of which were democratic, and Bâle, Fribourg, Berne, Lucerne, Zurich, Schaffhausen and Soleure, which had Constitutions more or less aristocratic. The Confederation underwent various vicissitudes during the wars of the French Revolution of 1789, and six other Cantons, some of them being districts which had separated from existing Cantons, were received into the Confederation, namely, St. Gall, Grisons, Argovie, Thurgovie, Tessin and Vaud. In 1803, Napoleon, then First Consul, imposed upon the Confederation, in the character of Mediator between the partisans of a Central State and those of a Federal State, a new Constitution, under the title of an "Act of Mediation," which intrusted the interests of the Confederation to a Federal Diet, which was to meet at Fribourg, Berne, Soleure, Bâle, Zurich or Lucerne, year by year, and in each year the Burgomaster of the directing Canton was to be the Landammann of Switzerland, charged with the Presidency of the Diet and with all communications with Foreign Powers. The Act of Mediation was superseded in 1814 by an alliance of a Federal Character between the nineteen Cantons²⁷, and in the following year three new Cantons, Neuchâtel, Geneva, and Valais, were admitted into the Confederation, so that the new Act of Confederation, concluded 7th August, 1815, embraced twenty-two Cantons²⁸. It was this new Confederation, which acceded formally to the territorial arrangements of the Congress of Vienna on 12 August, 1815; and, in consideration of its accession, the perpetual neutrality of Switzerland and the inviolability of its soil were recognised and guaranteed by the Powers, which signed the Final Act of the Congress.

The Swiss
Confederation of 1648.

The Helvetic Confederation
of 1815.

§ 50. The Helvetic Confederation of 1815 was an Union of a closer kind than the early Federal Pact, which had preceded the Constitution under the Act of Mediation. Its object was declared to be the preservation of the freedom, independence and security against foreign assault, and of the domestic order and tranquillity of the twenty-two Cantons. The Cantons guaranteed reciprocally to one another their respective political Constitutions and their territorial Possessions. The Confederation had a common army, composed of contingents of men from each Canton, and a common military chest, supplied by duties levied on the importation of foreign merchandise, and collected by the frontier Cantons. The Diet consisted of one deputy from each Canton voting according to instructions, and it assembled at Berne, Zurich, or Lucerne alternately. The direction of the affairs of the Confederation, when the Diet was not in session, was confided to the Canton in which it ought to assemble, and the duties of Directing Canton (Vorort) accordingly devolved every alternate two years upon the Protestant Canton of Zurich and the Roman Catholic Cantons of Berne and Lucerne. All the functions which had belonged to the Directing Authority of the Confederation before 1798, were, under the new Constitution, continued to the Directing Canton. The Diet had the prerogative of declaring war and concluding treaties of peace, alliance, and commerce with Foreign States. It provided for the internal and external security of the Confederation, directed the operations and appointed the Commanders of the Federal Army, and nominated the Ministers accredited to Foreign Powers. In case of internal or external danger, each Canton had the right of demanding the aid of the other Cantons, in which case notice was to be given immediately to the Directing Canton, in order that the Diet might be called together to provide the necessary measures of security. Under the Federal Compact prior to 1798, the Cantons might make separate treaties with one another or with Foreign Powers. Under the Confederation of 1815, the individual Cantons were precluded from concluding any alliance which might be prejudicial (nachtheilige) to the General Confederation, or to the right of the other Cantons.

²⁷ Martens, N. R. II. p. 68.

²⁸ Martens, N. R. IV. p. 173.

The Vorort or Directing Canton.

§ 51. The French Revolution of 1830 led to various changes in the Internal Constitutions of the different Cantons, and a plan for the revision of the Federal Pact of 1815 was drawn up by a Committee of the

The League of Sarnen.

Diet in 1832. The object of the revision was mainly to assign to the Federal Authorities more of the attributes of a Central Government than they had hitherto possessed; but the scheme was vigorously opposed by Seven Cantons, namely, Schwytz, Uri, Unterwald, Bâle, Tessin, Neuchatel and Valais. These Cantons united themselves together in a separate Confederation, called the League of Sarnen. The Diet of 1833 took the necessary measures for dissolving the League of Sarnen, and for compelling the seceding Cantons to send Deputies to the National Diet. The question of the revision of the Federal Pact was renewed in 1834, but unsuccessfully. In 1846 a separate armed League of the Seven Catholic Cantons was formed, under the title of Sonderbund, which was in fact an armed Confederation within the Confederation. This association being at variance with the Sixth Article of the Federal Pact, it was resolved by the Diet that it should be put down by force of arms, which was accordingly effected. The eventful political changes, which convulsed Europe in 1848, contributed to bring about a change in that year in the Constitution of the Confederation, whereby it more nearly approximates at present to the model of the Federal Union of the North American States.

The Son-
derbund.

The Swiss Confederation of 1848.

§ 52. The existing Constitution of the Swiss Confederation was voted by the Diet, on 29th May, 1874. The Confederation consists, as under the settlement of 1815, of twenty-two Cantons; but of these Bâle is divided into Bâle-town and Bâle-country; Unterwalden into Upper and Lower Unterwalden; and Appenzell into Outer and Inner Rhodes. The object of the Confederation is declared to be to secure the Independence of the Country (la patrie) against foreign assault, to maintain tranquillity and order in the Interior ; to protect the liberty and rights of the Confederates ; and to promote their common prosperity. The Cantons are respectively Sovereign in all matters in which their Sovereignty has not been limited by the Federal Constitution. The Cantons are forbidden to enter into any private alliance or any treaty of a political character with one another, but they may conclude with one another Conventions upon matters of Legislation, Administration, and Justice, subject to the approval of the Federal Authority. The Confederation alone has the right of declaring war and concluding peace, as well as of making alliances and treaties with Foreign Powers, and more especially treaties of commerce, and of regulating the custom-duties on foreign imports. The Cantons retain the right of concluding with Foreign States conventions on matters of Public Economy and relations of Neighbourhood and Police ; but these conventions must contain nothing prejudicial to the Confederation, or to the rights of the Cantons, and all official relations between the Cantons and Foreign Governments are carried on through the medium of the Federal Council, saving always to the Cantons the right of corresponding with the authorities of a Foreign State on matters within the scope of their Cantonal Conventions. The Confederation determines the conditions under which strangers may obtain Swiss naturalisation, and under which Swiss citizens may renounce their Swiss national character. The Confederation is also empowered to expel from its territory strangers who compromise either the Internal or the External security of Switzerland. The Federal Authorities consist of a Federal Council and a Federal Assembly ; the latter consisting of two Sections or Councils, a National Council, and a Council of States. The National Council is composed of Deputies of the Swiss People, in the proportion of one Deputy for every 20,000 citizens, and every natural-born Swiss of the age of twenty years complete, unless under some legal disability, has a right to vote for members of the National Council ; and, if a layman, is eligible as a Deputy. The National Council is elected for three years, and the whole body is renewable at each election. The Council of States, on the other hand, is composed of forty-four Deputies of Cantons, two Deputies being nominated by each Canton ; and in the case of the divided Cantons, one Deputy is nominated by each Half-Canton. Each Council chooses for each Session a President and a Vice-President from its own body. These officers are not re-eligible until a session has intervened. One of the most important functions of the Federal Assembly is to select the Federal Council, which is the Supreme Executive body, and the directing authority of the Confederation. For this purpose the National Council and the Council of States meet in one body, and elect seven persons, who must be Swiss Citizens, qualified to be members of the National Council, and who upon their election become members of the Federal Council for three years, and during such time are precluded from any other employment. The Federal Council must be renewed entirely upon each renewal of the National Council. The President of the Federal Council is the President of the Confederation, and he is selected, as well as the Vice-President of the Federal Council, from amongst the seven members of the Federal Council by the Federal Assembly. The President of the Confederation holds office for one year, and is not re-eligible. Four members must be present to enable the Federal Council to deliberate. The Federal Council nominates to Foreign Missions, examines all treaties concluded either amongst the Cantons or with Foreign States, and approves them, if it thinks fit. It watches over the interests of the Confederation abroad, and more particularly over its International relations; and is in general charged with the superintendence of the external relations of the Confederation, and with the maintenance of its Independence and its Neutrality.

The Federal Assembly.

The Federal Council.

§ 53. It will be seen that the existing Constitution of the Swiss Confederation bears a very close resemblance to the Federal Union of the North American States, and to the Federal Union of the Argentine Provinces. Each of these Confederations is for all International purposes a single Independent State. Each of them is only known to Foreign Powers through the medium of the Supreme Federal Government, which for all external purposes represents the Nationality of the entire Federal Body. A Federation of this kind is essentially a very different body from what is ordinarily understood by a Confederation of States. Heffter²⁹ accordingly, and other German Jurists, have employed the term Bundesstaat, or Federal State, to denote an Union of States, which is formed on a basis of equal rights, and rests upon a compact of Public Law (foedus), under which the individual States are merged for all International purposes in the Union. The term Confederation of States (Staaten-Bund), according to these writers, is properly applicable to an association of Independent States, each member whereof severally retains its own Nationality, whilst it participates at the same time in the common Nationality of the Confederation. The Germanic Confederation was an association of this latter character. It was composed of Inde-

Analogy between the Swiss Confederation and certain Federal Unions.

Bundesstaat or Federative State.

Staaten-Bund, or Confederation of States.

²⁹ Heffter, § 20.

pendent States, which had substituted for their ordinary rights and duties in relation to one another under the Law of Nations special rights and duties under the Articles of Confederation. They at the same time severally retained, in regard to non-Germanic Powers, all their rights and duties under the - Law of Nations ; whilst they had collectively acquired in relation to those Powers special rights and duties, as a Community of States, by virtue of the International recognition of the Articles of Confederation. Thus the Germanic Confederation was acknowledged by the representatives of the European Powers, at the Congress of Vienna, to have the right in its Collective capacity of making war and peace, of sending and receiving Embassies, and of forming alliances and treaties within the scope of its institution ; which was declared by the Articles of Confederation to be the maintenance of the Independence of the individual States, and the inviolability of their territory. The Confederation was in fact an association in the nature of a permanent League of Independent States, differing so far from an ordinary League, that it was clothed with a common National character for certain purposes, and its Right of common action within a certain sphere of International rights and obligations formed part of the Conventional Law of Europe.

Origin of the Germanic Con-
federation.

§ 54. The origin of so anomalous a body as the Germanic Confederation was traceable to a political necessity. In consequence of the creation of the Confederation of the Rhine under the protection of the Emperor Napoleon, and the subsequent abdication of the Crown of the Roman Empire of the Germans by the Emperor Francis³⁰ (August 6, 1806), not only the substance but the name of a Germanic Political Body had disappeared. It became, however, necessary after the successful conclusion of the War of Liberation, to create another Germanic Political Body, partly to satisfy the deep-seated feeling of Nationality amongst the people of the Germanic States ; partly to fill up the void which the disappearance of the Germanic Empire had caused in the centre of the European Political System. It was impossible to revive the ancient Empire without the sacrifice of the Sovereign rights, which the former Vassals of the Emperor and the Empire had enjoyed since the Dissolution of the Empire in 1806, and it was neither reasonable to demand nor practicable to enforce such a sacrifice. The Emperor Francis accordingly repudiated the advice of those who urged him to resume, as a matter of course, the Crown of the Roman Empire of the Germanic Nation. Others spoke in favour of a new Germanic Empire to be fashioned according to the requirements of the times. The majority of the German Princes, who had been admitted to the full enjoyment of Sovereign rights, were in favour of a simple political alliance amongst all the Sovereign Germanic States. The Emperor Francis rejected the idea of a new Germanic Empire, as it would have had the support only of political enthusiasts, and would have been opposed by the German Princes and the loyal portion of their subjects. On the other hand, a mere alliance between the Sovereign States of Germany did not offer in the opinion of the Imperial Cabinet sufficient guarantees for maintaining the tranquillity of Germany, and might even have proved to be a measure in its results antagonistic to that object. The Emperor Francis accordingly insisted on a Confederation of States, which would be compatible with the independence of the Sovereign Princes and States of Germany, and would at the same time secure the integrity of the Germanic territory. The acquiescence of Russia, Prussia, and Great Britain in this scheme was made a conditio sine qua non of Austria's accession to the Quadruple Alliance in 1813. The Sixth Article of the Treaty of Peace concluded at Paris between the Four Allied Powers and France (30 May, 1814) put the seal to the settlement of the previous year. "Les Etats de l'Allemagne seront indépendans et unis par un lien fédératif³¹." The Sovereign Princes and Free Cities of Germany in accordance with this stipulation empowered their Representatives to draw up certain Articles in the form of an Act of Federation, which was subsequently embodied in the Principal Act of the Congress of Vienna, and thus the German Federal Act became a recognised part of the Public Conventional law of Europe.

³⁰ Martens, Recueil, T. viii. p. 407.

The Federal Act
of 1815.

§ 55. There was a provision in the Federal Act, that the Diet should draw up as soon as possible a body of Fundamental Laws for the Confederation, and should settle its Organic institutions in regard to its external, military, and internal relations. A series of Ministerial Conferences accordingly took place at Vienna for the purpose of completing and consolidating the Organization of the Confederation, and the result of these Conferences was embodied in a Final Act (Schluss-Act), which received the signature of the Representatives of all the Sovereign Princes and Free Cities of Germany at Vienna (15 May, 1820), and which was subsequently approved by the Diet at Frankfort (8 June, 1850), and by an unanimous Resolution converted into a Fundamental Law of the Confederation, having the same force and validity as the Federal Act itself. It was therefore in the Final Act³² that the Constitution of the Germanic Confederation was developed and completed in its various details, pursuant to the Provisions of Article X of the Federal Act, which was textually inserted as Article LXII in the Principal Act³³ of the Congress of Vienna.

³¹ Martens, N. R. II. p. 6.

The Federal Act defined the object of the Confederation in Article II to be the maintenance of the external and internal security of Germany, and of the independence and inviolability of the Confederated States. The States of the Confederation bound themselves by Article XI to defend not only Germany in its entirety, but also each Individual State of the Union in case it should be attacked, and they mutually guaranteed to one another all such their possessions as were comprised within the Union. When war was declared by the Confederation, no member could carry on private negotiation with the enemy, nor make a peace or an armistice without the consent of the others. The Members of the Confederation, in reserving to themselves the right of forming alliances, obliged themselves not to contract any engagement, which should be prejudicial to the security of the Confederation or of the Individual States which composed it. The Confederate States undertook not to make war against one another on any pretext whatever, but to refer all their disputes to the Diet for its Mediation.

§ 56. The Final Act, which consisted of Sixty-five Final Act of 1820. Articles, developed more fully and explicitly the Fundamental Dispositions of the Federal Act in regard to the external relations of the Confederation in Sixteen Articles, consecutively from the Thirty-fifth to the Fiftieth inclusively. It was declared in Article XXXV, that the Confederation had the right, as a ³² Martens, N. R. V. p. 466.

³³ Ibid. N. R. II. p. 409.

Collective Power, to declare war, make peace, and contract alliances and negotiate treaties with due regard to the objects of its Institution, as announced in Article L of the Federal Act, namely, its own defence, the maintenance of the inviolability and external security of Germany, and of the independence and inviolability of each of the States of the Confederation. Article XXXVI declared that any damage caused to any Confederate State by a Foreign Power was a damage to the whole Confederation by virtue of the reciprocal guaranty of the integrity of their possessions, and on the other hand, the Confederated States undertook to refrain from giving any provocation to Foreign Powers. In case a Foreign Power should make complaint against a State, the Diet was empowered to require the State, if it was in the wrong, to make redress to the Foreign Power. Article XXXVII provided, that the Diet might examine into the origin of any differences which might arise between any State of the Confederation and a Foreign Power, and either refuse its aid if the State was in the wrong, or if the State was in the right, employ its good offices in its behalf. Article XXXVIII provided, that if there was reason to apprehend danger to any State of the Confederation, or to the whole body, the Diet should immediately adopt the necessary measures of defence. Article XXXIX provided, that if the Territory of any State of the Confederation was invaded, the fact of such invasion constituted a state of war for the whole Confederation, and the necessary measures of defence had to be at once adopted. Article XL provided, that if it should be necessary for the Confederation to make a formal Declaration of war, the General Assembly on its behalf should make such Declaration, if a majority of two-thirds so decided. By Article XLI, a Resolution of the Diet, that there was real danger of an hostile attack, or a formal Declaration of War on the part of the General Assembly, constituted all the Confederated States active parties in the war. Article XLII provided, that if the Diet should decide in the negative against there being any real danger of an hostile attack, the States which did not share the opinion of the majority of the Diet might concert among themselves measures of common defence. Article XLIII provided, that the Diet might mediate, if requested, between a Foreign Power and any Confederated State, which considered itself to be in particular danger of a foreign attack, if both the disputing parties consented to its mediation. Article XLIV provided, that every State, when war had been declared, might furnish any number of troops above its contingent at its own expense. By Article XLV the Diet was empowered to take the necessary steps to maintain the neutrality of the territory of the Confederation, if it should be threatened in a war between Foreign Powers, or otherwise. Article XLVI provided, that if a Confederated State, having possessions beyond the limits of the Confederation, undertook a war, as an European Power, the Confederation remained a stranger to such war. Article XLVII was a very important Article, as the protection of the Confederation was thereby extended to territory beyond its own limits. It provided, that in case any State was menaced or attacked in its possessions not comprised within the Confederation, the Confederation was not to adopt any measures of defence, nor to take an active part in the war, until the Diet should have recognised in its Permanent Council by a majority of voices the existence of danger to the Territory of the Confederation, in which case all the dispositions of the previous Articles should equally apply. Article XLVIII provided, that the dispositions of the Federal Act which precluded every State, after war had been declared by the Confederation, from holding any private negotiations or making a separate peace or armistice, should apply equally to all States, whether they possessed or not territory beyond the limits of the Confederation. Article XLIX provided, that when peace was to be made, a Committee of the Diet should direct the negotiations, and Plenipotentiaries from the Diet should conduct them. The ratification of all treaties of peace should only be pronounced by the General Assembly. Such was the organization of this remarkable National League for the security and defence of the Germanic soil from foreign attack.

The International Functions of the Diet.

The Ordinary Functions of the Diet in regard to Foreign Relations of Peace were regulated by Article

I. It was authorised as the organ of the Confederation, To watch over the maintenance of peace and friendly relations with Foreign Powers. 2. To receive the Envoys of Foreign Powers, who might be accredited to the Confederation, and to nominate Envoys to Foreign States, if it was judged necessary. 3. To conduct negotiations and to conclude treaties on behalf of the Confederation. 4. To employ its good offices with Foreign Powers on behalf of any of the Members of the Confederation who might claim them, and to employ them also with the States of the Confederation, if Foreign Governments should request their intervention. In accordance with the second provision of the above Article, Diplomatic Relations between the Confederation, in its character of an European Power, and the Non-Germanic Powers of Europe, were habitually maintained by permanent Missions accredited by the latter Powers to the Germanic Confederation at Frankfort, but the Diet did not judge it necessary to accredit Resident Envoys on behalf of the Confederation to any Foreign Powers. It was only on extraordinary occasions, as in the case of negotiations which affected the interests of the Confederation, as a Federal System of States, that the Diet appointed Plenipotentiaries to treat with Foreign Powers²⁴. The respective States of the Confederation meanwhile both accredited and received Resident Plenipotentiaries, to superintend their separate International Relations with Non-Germanic Powers.

Diplomatic Relations.

§ 57. It is not within the scope of the present treatise to examine at any length the Internal Constitution of the Germanic Confederation of 1815, further than as it may serve to throw light upon the Constitution of the New Confederation of 1871, which bears the name of the German Empire. The affairs of the Confederation, as a Federal System of States, were intrusted to a Federative Diet, which sat at Frankfort on the Maine, and in which each State was represented by a Minister Plenipotentiary. This Diet bore no resemblance except in name to the Diet of the Ancient Empire, which consisted of three Colleges, each independent of the other, and the Decrees of which required the assent of the Emperor to give them validity. Whereas this Federative Diet was a collective Sovereign Assembly, which exercised its functions in absolute independence of any Superior

The Ordinary Assembly of the Diet.

²⁴ Thus the Plenipotentiaries of Austria and of Prussia respectively were constituted Plenipotentiaries of the Diet of the Germanic Confederation, and in that character acceded on behalf of the Confederation to the Treaty of London, (19 April, 1839,) where- by certain portions of the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg (Germanic Soil) were ceded to Belgium in exchange for portions of the Province of Limburg. Martens, Nouveau Recueil, XVI. p. 791.

Political Authority. The Plenipotentiaries of the States, who were bound by their instructions and could not act without them, voted in the Diet under different conditions, according as they were convened in the Ordinary Assembly of the Diet, or in the General Assembly. When the Plenipotentiaries met in the Ordinary Assembly, or Permanent Council, eleven of them exercised respectively an individual vote, but the remainder voted in six separate groups, two or more States, as the case might be, having the right of giving only a single vote collectively. The votes were thus arranged without prejudice to the rank of the Members :—

1. Austria.....	I
2. Prussia	I
3. Bavaria.....	I
4. Saxony	I
5. Hanover	I
6. Württemberg	I
7. Baden	I
8. Electoral Hesse	I
9. Grand Ducal Hesse.....	I
10. Denmark (for Holstein)	I
11. Netherlands (for Luxemburg)	I
12. Grand-Ducal and Ducal Houses of Saxony	I
13. Brunswick and Nassau	I
14. Mecklenburg Schwerin and Mecklenburg Strelitz	I
15. Holstein-Oldenburg, Anhalt and Schwarzburg...	I
16. Hohenzollern, Liechtenstein, Reuss, Schaumburg-Lippe, Lippe (Detmold) and Waldeck	I
17. The Free Cities of Lübeck, Frankfort, Bremen and Hamburg	I
Total Votes.....	17

Admission of Hesse-Homburg,
7 July,
1817.

Hesse-Homburg was not admitted into the Confederation until 7 July, 1817³⁵, when it was allowed to share the collective vote of Hohenzollern and its co-ordinate States. The Plenipotentiary of Austria was entitled to preside in the Diet. Each State of the Confederation had the right to propose any measure for consideration, and the President was bound within a given time to bring it before the Diet. Such was the Constitution of the Diet in what was termed the Ordinary Assembly or Close Council.

³⁵ Meyer, Staats-Acten des Deutschen Bundes, Tom. II. p. 71.

§ 58. The Diet formed itself into a General Assembly termed the Plenum, or Full Chapter, whenever it was necessary to decide upon questions touching the enactment or the modification of Fundamental Laws, or the adoption of measures affecting the Federal Act itself, or the Organic institutions and other arrangements of common interest to the States of the Confederation. In this Assembly every State had a separate voice, the larger States being allowed a greater number of votes in the following proportions:—

1. Austria.....	4
2. Prussia.....	4
3. Saxony.....	4
4. Bavaria.....	4
5. Hanover	4
6. Würtemberg	4
7. Baden	3
8. Electoral Hesse	3
9. Grand Ducal Hesse.....	3
10. Holstein and Lauenburg.....	3
11. Luxemburg	3
12. Brunswick	2
13. Mecklenburg-Schwerin	2
14. Nassau	2
15. Saxe-Weimar	1
16. Saxe-Gotha	1
17. Saxe-Coburg	1
18. Saxe-Meiningen	1

The Plenum or Full Chapter of the Diet.

19. Saxe-Altenburg ³⁶	I
20. Mecklenburg-Strelitz	I
21. Holstein-Oldenburg	I
22. Anhalt-Dessau	I
23. Anhalt-Bernburg	I
24. Anhalt-Köthen	I
25. Schwarzburg-Sondershausen	I
26. Schwarzburg-Rodolstadt	I
27. Hohenzollern-Hechingen	I
28. Liechtenstein	I
29. Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen	I
30. Waldeck	I
31. Reuss (elder branch)	I
32. Reuss (younger branch)	I
33. Schaumburg-Lippe	I
34. Lippe-Detmold	I
35. Lübeck	I
36. Frankfort	I
37. Bremen	I
38. Hamburg	I
Total Votes.....	69

Upon the admission of Hesse-Homburg into the Confederation, (7 July, 1817,) that State became entitled to a single vote in the Full Chapter; so that there were seventy voices in the General Assembly. The Diet, in its Ordinary Assembly, had the right of deciding by a majority of votes, whether any question should be submitted to the votes of the General Assembly. The Ordinary Assembly had the right of full discussion, and prepared the resolutions to be submitted in the General Assembly, which had no right of discussion; but simply exercised a right of approval or disapproval by a majority of two-thirds of all its votes. The Diet sat permanently, but it had a power of adjourning itself, after it had completed its deliberations on any subject, for a period not longer than four months. It will be seen, that as forty-seven votes were required in the General Assembly to constitute a majority of two-thirds, an affirmative decision of the General Assembly implied a greater amount of common agreement amongst the Confederate States than an affirmative decision of the Ordinary Assembly, and that when a combination of the more powerful States might have succeeded in carrying a measure in the Ordinary Assembly, a combination of the less powerful States might be enabled to reject it in the General Assembly. Such was the original conception of the General Assembly in the Federal Act, by the Sixth and Seventh Articles of which it had been provided, that two-thirds of the votes of the Full Chapter should constitute a majority in respect of such matters of common interest as came within its province. It was, however, subsequently provided by the Fourteenth Article of the Final Act, that in regard to Organic institutions, whereby are meant permanent arrangements, serving as means of executing the objects directly connected with the acknowledged end of the Confederation, the General Assembly ought to be unanimous in assenting not merely to the preliminary question, whether they should allow any measure at all under the circumstances to be laid before them, but also in approving the principle and the essential arrangements of any plan which might be proposed. If the General Assembly should decide in favour of the project submitted to them, the details of its execution were to be referred to the Permanent Council, which was to decide all questions which might arise as to those details by an absolute majority of votes, with power to appoint a Committee to reconcile divergent opinions.

³⁶ Formerly Saxe-Hildburghausen.

A Majority of Two-Thirds.

Unanimity
of the Diet.

Permanent character
of the Germanic Con-
federation.

§ 59. By Article XI of the Federal Act, the States of the Confederation mutually guaranteed to one another all such portions of their Possessions as were comprised within the Confederation. By Article V of the Final Act, no State was at liberty to detach itself from the Confederation; and by Article VI no new member could be admitted into the Confederation, without the unanimous assent of all the Confederate States. No change which might take place in the state of the Possessions of the members of the Confederation could affect their rights and engagements in reference to the Confederation without the consent of the Confederation. No State could voluntarily cede its rights of Sovereignty over any portion of its territory within the Confederation to any non-Confederate Power without the consent of the Confederation. The National Unity of the Confederation, in regard to all matters affecting its territory, was thus complete. We find, accordingly, that upon the signature of the definitive Treaty of London³⁷, (19 April, 1839,) whereby the King of Holland ceded to the King of the Belgians a portion of the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg in exchange for a portion of the province of Limburg, not merely was the recognition of the Five Great Powers formally granted to the dissolution of the political Union, which existed between Holland and Belgium, in pursuance of the Treaty of Vienna, of 31 May, 1815; but the Germanic Confederation by its Plenipotentiaries, formally acceded to the territorial arrangements, which had been concluded between the Five Great Powers, on the one hand, and Holland and Belgium on the other hand; and under which the King of Holland, as Grand Duke of Luxemburg, had ceded to the King

Treaty of London,
19 April,
1839.

³⁷ Martens, Nouveau Supplément, T. XVI. p. 791.

of the Belgians a portion of the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg within the territory of the Confederation, in consideration of a territorial Indemnity within the Province of Limburg. The Confederation having thus acceded, in its character of an European Power, to the International readjustment of a portion of its territory, it remained for the Diet to order Constitutionally, according to the provisions of the Final Act, such arrangements as might be necessary between the Confederation and the Grand Duke of Luxemburg, as one of its members, consequent on the altered circumstances of the Grand Duchy.

§ 60. The Germanic Confederation of 1815 was the creation, as already observed, of a political necessity. The German Empire of 1871. It was a compromise between the minor States and the two great Powers. It lasted, however, more than fifty years in spite of certain defects in its Constitution, and notwithstanding that full effect could not be given to that Constitution from a want of harmony in the policy of the two great Powers. War ultimately broke out between these two Powers, the issue of which was disastrous to Austria, who finally under Article IV of the Treaty of Prague (23 August, 1866) acknowledged the dissolution of the Germanic Confederation as hitherto constituted, and gave her consent to a new organization of Germany without the participation of the Imperial Austrian State. Austria likewise promised to recognise the more restricted Federal relations, which Prussia proposed to establish to the north of the line of the River Maine, and declared her concurrence in the formation of an Association of the Germanic States to the south of that line, whose national connection with the North German Confederation was reserved for further arrangement between the parties, and which would have an independent international existence. A further result of this Treaty was that the King of Prussia declared the Kingdom of Hanover, the Electorate of Hesse Cassel, the Duchy of Nassau, and the Free City of Frankfort, by a decree bearing date 20 Sept., 1866, and by various Royal Letters Patent, to be united for ever to the Prussian Monarchy, and took possession of them by right of conquest and in consequence of a war, which as alleged by Prussia had been commenced by them in alliance with Austria and in violation of the Federal Law then in force. The annexation of these four States by Prussia, who had already occupied the Duchy of Holstein by right of conquest over the King of Denmark, was a necessary preliminary to the formation of a North German Confederation, the Constitution of which, as promulgated on 14 June, 1867, it is unnecessary to examine as it was merely preparatory to a more complete Union of the Constituent States in a new Confederation, which bears the name of the German Empire. The same observation will apply to the Association of the Germanic States to the south of the line of the Maine, which have also been admitted into this more complete Union, which is declared in the preamble of its Constitution to be an everlasting Confederation for the Protection of the Territory of the Confederation and the rights thereof, as well as to care for the welfare of the German people. It is this Confederation which bears the name of the German Empire, of which the Presidency is declared by Article XI of its Constitution to belong to the King of Prussia, who bears the name of German Emperor. His functions are to represent the Empire internationally, to declare war and to conclude peace in the name of the Empire, to enter into alliances and other treaties with Foreign Powers, and to accredit and to receive Ambassadors. The consent however of the Council of the Confederation is necessary for a declaration of war in the name of the Empire, unless an attack on the territory or the coast of the Confederation has taken place. Further, in so far as Treaties with foreign States may have reference to Affairs which in accordance with Article IV belong to the jurisdiction of the Imperial legislature, the consent of the Council of the Confederation is requisite for the conclusion of such treaties, and the Sanction of the Imperial Diet for their coming into force.

The Council of the Confederation, which corresponds in some respects in its organization with the Plenum or Full Chapter of the former Confederation of 1815, consists of the Representatives of the members of the Confederation, amongst which the votes are divided in such a manner that Prussia has together with the former votes of Hanover, Electoral Hesse, Holstein, Nassau, and Frankfort seventeen votes, the total number of votes being fifty-eight, divided in this manner:—

1. Prussia with the five annexed States	17
2. Bavaria	6
3. Saxony	4
4. Würtemberg	4
5. Baden	3
6. Hesse (Grand Ducal).....	3
7. Mecklenburg-Schwerin.....	2
8. Saxe-Weimar	1
9. Mecklenburg-Strelitz	1
10. Oldenburg	1
11. Brunswick	2
12. Saxe-Meiningen.....	1
13. Saxe-Altenburg	1
14. Saxe-Coburg-Gotha	1
15. Anhalt	1
16. Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt	1

17. Schwarzburg-Sondershausen.....	1
18. Waldeck.....	1
19. Reuss (elder line)	1
20. Reuss (younger line).....	1
21. Schaumburg-Lippe	1
22. Lippe.....	1
23. Lübeck	1
24. Bremen	1
25. Hamburg	1
Total Votes.....	58

Each member of the Confederation can nominate as many Plenipotentiaries to the Council of the Confederation as it has votes, but the totality of votes can only be given in one sense.

The Council of the Confederation elects permanent Committees from its own members for seven different departments of internal affairs, and besides these a Committee for foreign affairs is formed in the Council of the Confederation, comprising the Representatives of the Kingdoms of Bavaria, Saxony, and Würtemberg and two other Representatives of other Confederated States, who are elected annually to the Council, and in this Committee Bavaria is entitled always to occupy the Chair. Every member of the Council of the Confederation has a right to appear in the Imperial Diet and must at all times be heard, if he so desires, in order to represent the views of his Government, even when those views have not been adopted by a majority of the Council. No one may at the same time be a member both of the Council of the Confederation and of the Imperial Diet.

The Imperial Diet is elected by universal and direct election with secret votes, the total number of members being 382. The elections take place in accordance with a Federal Electoral Law.

It will be seen that the extinct Germanic Confederation of 1815-1866 was strictly speaking a Confederation of independent States, entitled to be classed under the most ancient category of such Unions, of which the Confederation of the United States of America from 1776 to 1787, and the Swiss Confederation from 1804 to 1848, were examples.

This peculiar class of Confederated States is by German Jurists distinguished by the term Staaten-Bund from the closer union of States known as a Federal State (Bundes-Staat), of which the United States of America since 1787, and the Swiss Confederation since 1848, are instances. On the other hand the present Germanic Confederation, which bears the name of the German Empire, has been distinguished by German Jurists from a Staaten-Bund by a phrase specially coined for the occasion, and it is classed by them under the head of Staaten-Reich. It is difficult, however, to discover any international feature of difference between the German Empire of 1871 and a Staaten-Bund. The difference, in fact, between them seems to be formal, in so far as the Executive Chief of an ordinary Federative State is styled a President, whereas the Executive Chief of the German Empire of 1871 bears the title of Emperor. There is something, however, to be said in favour of adopting this new classification as regards the international character of the German Empire of 1871, but then both the Ottoman Empire, and the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy may from a certain point of view be also properly designated by the same phrase, inasmuch as they consist of "States" and not of "Provinces," and the Executive Chief is styled an Emperor, not a President.

CHAPTER IV.

THE OTTOMAN EMPIRE.

International Relations of the Mahommedan World—Admission of the Porte into the Concert of European Nations—Treaty of Paris, 30 March, 1856—Declaration of Maritime Law, 16 April, 1856—Constitution of the Ottoman Empire—Normal division into Vilayets—Christian and Mahommedan Dependencies—The States on the Barbary Coast—Algiers, formerly a vassal State of the Ottoman Empire, now a dependency of France—Tripoli, formerly an hereditary Regency, now a Vilayet of the Ottoman Empire under a removable Vali—Tunis, lately a Vilayet of the Ottoman Empire, now under a French Protectorate—Egypt, formerly a Vilayet, now a vassal State of the Ottoman Empire under an hereditary Khedive—Treaty of London, 15 July, 1840—Principality of Samos, an autonomous dependency of the Porte under a Christian Prince, paying tribute to the Porte—Diplomatic Note of 10 Dec., 1832—Bulgaria, an autonomous and tributary Principality under a Christian Prince—Treaty of Berlin, 1878—Eastern Roumelia, an autonomous Province under a Christian Vali nominated by the Porte in consultation with the Signatory Powers of the Treaty of Berlin, 1878—The Lebanon, an autonomous Province under a Christian Governor-General, nominated by the Porte after consultation with the Signatory Powers of the Treaty of Paris of Sept. 5, 1860—Bosnia and Herzegovina under Treaty-Arrangements occupied and administered by Austria-Hungary—The Island of Cyprus occupied and administered by Great Britain under a Treaty of Alliance with the Porte of 4 June, 1878.

International Relations of the Mahommedan World.

§ 61. THE International Relations of the Ottoman Porte with the Christian Powers of Europe have undergone a remarkable change and received an extraordinary development during the last preceding fifty years. At the commencement of the present century, it would not have been incorrect to have described those Relations as resting solely on compact. Such, indeed, was the view adopted by Lord Stowell in 1804, when he was called upon to administer the Public Law of Europe in matters wherein the interests of Ottoman Subjects were concerned, "The Inhabitants of the Ottoman Empire," he observes¹, "are not possessors of exactly the same Law of Nations with ourselves. In consideration of the peculiarities of their situation and character, the Court has repeatedly expressed its disposition not to hold them bound to the utmost rigour of that system of Public Law, on which European States have so long acted in their intercourse with one another." The same distinguished Jurist, on another occasion² when the acts of an established Mahommedan Government were impugned, observed that "although their notions of justice to be observed amongst Nations differ from those which we entertain, we do not on that account venture to call in question their Public Acts. As to the mode of confiscation, which may have taken place on this vessel, whether by formal sentence or not, we must presume it was done regularly in their way, and according to the Established Custom of that part of the world. There might perhaps be cause of capture, according to their notions, for some infringement of the Regulations of a Treaty, as it is by the Law of Treaty only that these Nations hold themselves bound, conceiving (as some other people have foolishly imagined) that there is no other Law of Nations but that which is derived from positive compact and convention."

¹ The Madonna del Burso, 4 c.
 Robinson's Admiralty Reports, p. 172.

² The Helena, 4 c. Robinson's Admiralty Reports, p. 6.

Wheaton has adopted an identical view of the International Relations of the Mahommedan world. "The European Law of Nations," he writes³, "is mainly founded upon that community of origin, manners, institutions, and religion, which distinguishes the Christian Nations from those of the Mahommedan world. In respect to the mutual intercourse between the Christian and the Mahommedan Powers, the former have been sometimes content to take the Law from the Mahommedan, and in others to modify the International Law of Christendom in its application to them. Instances of the first may be found in the cases of the ransom of prisoners, the rights of ambassadors, and many others where the milder usages established amongst Christian Nations have not yet been adopted by the Mahommedan Powers. On some other points they are considered as entitled to a very relaxed application of the peculiar principles established by long usage amongst the States of Europe, holding an intimate and constant intercourse with one another."

Admission of the Porte into the Concert of European Nations.

§ 62. Such may have been a correct picture of the exceptional position which the Ottoman Porte occupied amongst the Powers of Europe during the early part of the reign of the Emperor Mahommed II. (1808—39). The Ottoman Empire was accordingly not represented by any Minister in the Congress of Vienna (anno 1815), nor was it included in the system of Public Law recognised by the Powers there assembled. But since the destruction of the Janissaries (17 June, 1826) the Ottoman Porte has steadily advanced in its practice towards the European platform of Public Law. It has not, it is true, made any formal communication to the European Powers on the subject; but it may be considered to have substantially pledged itself to the acceptance of the International Law of Europe by subscribing, as one of the Parties to the General Treaty of Paris, (30 March, 1856⁴), Treaty of Paris, 30 March, 1856. to the clause of the Seventh Article, whereby the Sublime Porte is declared "to be admitted to a participation in the advantages of the Public Law of Europe and the System of Concert attached to it," since it is a cardinal principle of that System, that the rights and obligations of Nations are reciprocal. The Porte appears on that occasion not only to have acquiesced in the declaration of its admission into the European Family of Nations, but to have joined in applying to itself the principle involved in that declaration, as may be clearly deduced from the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Articles of the Treaty, whereby the Provisions of the Final Act of the Congress of Vienna concerning the navigation of rivers, which separate or traverse several States, are made applicable to the Danube and its mouths, and which disposition is declared to form part of the Public Law of Europe, and to be under the guaranty of all the Contracting Powers. The Porte had already abandoned its own traditions with regard to the precedence and reception of Foreign Ambassadors, and had in practice conformed itself to the rules established amongst the European Powers in regard to an uniform mode of reception, and an uniform scale of rank and precedence for Ambassadors and other Diplomatic Agents: it had already appealed in its negotiations with various Christian Powers, as for instance in the case of Greece in 1854, to International Rights and the Law of Nations as something independent of mere Compact, and upon which it took its stand in common with the ⁴ Martens, N. R. Gén. XV. p. 770.

³ History of the Law of Nations. Part IV. § 21.

Declaration of Maritime
Law, 16
April,
1856.

Powers of Europe ; it has further by subscribing the Declaration of Maritime Law at Paris, (16 April, 1856,) subsequently to its signature of the General Treaty, formally placed on record its assent to the milder practice, which the European Nations have agreed henceforth to adopt, in regard to the respective rights and duties of Belligerent and Neutral Powers.

It would thus appear, that the Ottoman Porte has for all practical purposes adopted the Common Law of Europe, as the rule of its intercourse with Non-Mahommedan Powers in matters not specially provided for by Treaty-engagements. Its International Relations under Treaty-engagements are and will probably continue to be extremely anomalous, owing to the broad line of demarcation which separates the manners and institutions of the Mahommedan world from those of Christendom. Some of these Treaty-engagements are strictly of a political character, establishing special obligations between Christian States and Individual Governments of the Ottoman Empire ; others have in view the regulation and security of commercial intercourse between Ottoman and Christian Merchants, and are in form Capitulations between the Porte and Individual Christian Powers, being limited in their application to the subjects of those Powers whilst resident within the Ottoman Territory. These will require special notice in their proper place when the right of Treaty is discussed ; it will be sufficient for the present to have alluded to them.

Constitution of the Ottoman Empire.

§ 63. The Ottoman Empire is constitutionally a Single State, composed of thirty-six⁵ General Govern-

⁵ This number is given in the La Turquie Actuelle, Introduction, p. 16. Imperial Almanack (Salnamé) of 1854, and is adopted by Ubicini, ments, termed "Vilayets," which are subdivided into Provinces (livas or sandjaks); the Provinces are in their turn subdivided into Districts (Cazas or Centres of Justice), which are again subdivided into Cantons (nahiès) composed of Villages or Hamlets. Each Vilayet is administered by a Governor-General who bears the title of Vali. The Sandjaks or Livas are administered under the Vali by Governors, who are styled Mutessarifs. The Cazas are administered by Lieutenant-Governors (Kaimakams), and the Nahiès by Mayors (Mudirs)*. The division of the Empire into General Governments, which for the most part bear the name of the city, which is the seat of the Government, dates from the reign of Sultan Mahmoud II, who determined to efface the ancient provincial divisions of the Empire, as keeping up the memory of the old nationalities, and with that object subdivided the ancient provinces into Vilayets. The existing organization, however, saving certain reforms introduced into the Vilayet of the Danube by Midhat Pacha in 1864, dates from the reign of the Sultan Abdul Medjid, who succeeded to the throne in 1839. Of these Vilayets, which were thirty-six in number as organized by the Sultan Abdul Medjid, fifteen were in Europe, eighteen in Asia, and three in Africa. The Asiatic Vilayets retain in the present day their original territorial limits with the exception of portions of the Vilayets of Trebizonde, Erzeroum, and Van, which have been ceded to Russia under the Preliminary Peace of San Stefano of 3 March, 1878, and of which the cession has been confirmed by the subsequent Treaty of Berlin of the same year. On the other hand the European Vilayets have undergone great changes, and some of them have ceased to form part of the Ottoman Empire, for instance the Vilayets of Bogdan and Eflak (Moldavia and Walachia), and the Vilayet of Syrp (Servia). These three latter Vilayets enjoyed for some time a qualified independence under the Suzerainty of the Sultan, and whilst they were still recognised internationally as integral parts of the Ottoman Empire, they were in fact governed by Christian Princes, elected or hereditary as the case may have been, until their independence was definitively recognised by the Treaty of Berlin of 13 July, 1878. The condition of these Vilayets, being Christian dependencies of the Porte, was at all times distinct from that of the Mahommedan dependencies. By a strict application of its religious Law (The Coran, IX. 29) the Porte held each of its Christian dependencies by the obligation of paying tribute and obeying the General Law of the Empire. The Mahommedan dependencies, on the other hand, were bound to meet the Padichah's requisitions both in men and in money for purposes of war. The general rule has been modified in particular instances owing at one time to the weakness of the Porte itself, and to the successful resistance of the Valis, at other times to the interference of Foreign Powers taking the form of treaty-engagements, to which effect has been given by the Padichah's Firman or Edict. Of the three African Vilayets, to wit, Egypt, Tripoli, and Tunis, Egypt and Tunis are instances, in which Foreign Powers have intervened and procured for the Vali an hereditary tenure of his office of Governor-General, and an enlargement of his powers, whilst Tripoli has been reduced by force of arms on the part of the Porte to the condition of an immediate Pachalik, like the Asiatic Vilayets, of which the Vali has only a precarious tenure.

* The Mudirs are elected by the inhabitants of each Nahiè, subject to confirmation by the Vali. All the other functionaries are nominated by the Central Government Loi des Vilayets (1870). Samwer and Hopf., Traité 2^{me} Série, Tom. III. p. 49.

§ 64. The Dependencies of the Porte on the Barbary Coast were formerly three in number, Algiers, Tunis, and Tripoli. Of these, Algiers was not originally a conquest of the Porte, but an acquisition of the Greek Renegade Kharaddin, better known as Barbarossa, who first introduced the practice of piracy in the Mediterranean and Levant Seas, and left it an established institution amongst the Mussulman tribes of the Barbary Coast. Barbarossa and his brothers were in fact Condottieri of the Sea. They had under the pretext of commercial enterprise established an armed fleet in the Mediterranean, and when Selim, the last Independent Prince of Algiers, was hard pressed by the united forces of the Spaniards and the Arab Tribes in alliance with the Emperor Charles V, Barbarossa brought his squadron to his aid, and upon his death succeeded to his Sovereignty. He was however sensible of his inability to struggle alone with success against the Powers of Christendom, and he accordingly hastened to place himself, as a vassal, at the feet of the Padichah of the Ottomans, who readily accepted his submission in that character, and conferred upon him the government of his newly acquired territory with the title of Bey. The subsequent career of Barbarossa fills a considerable page in the History of the Ottoman Empire. By the orders of the Emperor Soleiman I, he led his fleet against Tunis with a view to dethrone the Sultan Moulei Hasan, and to supplant his dynasty. His success was but temporary, and Tunis was restored to the ancient dynasty of Beni-Hafas by the united arms of the Emperor Charles V and the Knights of Malta.

The States
on the Barbary Coast.

Algiers.

Tunis.

experienced subsequently great vicissitudes. The Spaniards under Don John of Austria regained possession of it for a short time in 1572, but in 1574 it passed into the hands of the Ottomans, and until very recently has been governed by a succession of Valis, nominated by the Porte, whose firmans are registered in the Chancery of the Divan at Constantinople.

Tripoli.

Tripoli had meantime been wrested by the Ottoman arms from the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, and it was placed in like manner under the government of a Beylerbey. It was after this period that other Renegades from Christianity, taking advantage of the religious law of the Mussulman, which contemplates a permanent state of war to exist between the true Believer and the Unbeliever, capable of being suspended only by express treaty or by payment of tribute, gave so great a development to piratical enterprise in the ports of the three Barbary Powers, that they came to be considered in Europe as mere nests of pirates, which had usurped the character of political Bodies. So formidable indeed were the ravages of the Algerine Corsairs in the Seventeenth Century, and so inefficient was the Sovereignty of the Ottoman Porte to restrain them, that the Christian Powers of Europe found it expedient to conclude Conventions directly with the Barbary Governments in furtherance of treaties already existing with the Ottoman Porte. Thus Louis XIII of France concluded a treaty at Marseilles with the Pacha of Algiers (24 March, 1619)⁷, whereby the latter bound himself to observe more faithfully than heretofore the commands of the Porte in regard to its Capitulations

Treaties
with Algiers.

⁷ Flassan, Histoire de la Diplomatie Française II. p. 329. Dumont, *Traité*s, V. pt. II. p. 330.

with France. In the following year, Great Britain prepared to attack Algiers with a fleet under the command of Admiral Monson, but the projected hostilities were diverted by the payment of an indemnity from the Ottoman Porte. This result had been brought about through the instrumentality of Sir Thomas Roe, who had been despatched to Constantinople to open negotiations directly with the Porte*. Special treaties were soon after concluded between England and the Regencies of Algiers and Tunis respectively, which received the confirmation of the Padichah. In the middle of the Seventeenth Century King Charles II of England despatched the Earl of Winchelsea, (anno 1660,) as Ambassador to the Governor of Algiers, who had very recently assumed the title of Dey, and concluded a Treaty of Commerce directly with the Dey, the main object of which was to secure British Merchant Vessels from piratical seizure. In the early part of the Eighteenth Century no English vessel of Commerce ventured to enter the Mediterranean from the Atlantic without calling at Gibraltar for a Mediterranean pass, which was signed by the Lords of the English Admiralty, and which under treaties with the Barbary States was necessary to exempt an English vessel from capture by the Algerine Sea Rovers. This practice however was put an end to by the Bombardment of Algiers in 1815 by a British fleet under Lord Exmouth, when the Dey agreed to abolish Christian Slavery, and to conform himself to the usages of European Civilisation. Piracy however was not entirely abandoned by the Algerines until France declared war against the Dey in 1830 with a view to avenge a national affront, and at the same time to deliver the Mediterranean Sea for ever from the scourge of piracy. France subsequently found herself called upon to secure her peaceable occupation of the city of Algiers and the adjoining coast by extending her conquests over the internal territory appurtenant to the Algerine State, and has ultimately reduced the whole of the Algerine territory under French dominion.

* Roe, Negotiations with the Hammer. Histoire de l'Empire Ottoman Porte, p. 35. 260. Von Ottoman, IX. p. 30. Paris 1837.

Early Treaties with the Sublime Porte.

§ 65. It appears from the Treaty concluded by Sir John Finch in 1675, between the Ottoman Porte and England⁹, which recites and confirms the Articles of all the previous Treaties, that in the earliest Treaty with England, the Ottoman Porte had agreed "that the English Ambassadors may at their pleasure establish Consuls, resident in Aleppo, Alexandria, Tripoli of Syria, or Tunis, Algiers, Tripoli of Barbary, in Smyrna, the parts of Cairo, or any other parts of our dominions, and in like manner remove them or change and appoint others in their places, and none of our Ministers shall oppose or refuse to accept them;" and further, "the English Nation's Consul or Resident in any part of our dominions, being established by the Ambassador resident for the English Nation, our Minister shall have no power to imprison or examine them, or seal up their houses, nor to dismiss or displace them from their charge or office; but in case of any difference or suit with the Consul, there shall be made a Certificate to the Imperial Porte to the end that the Ambassador may protect or answer for them."

Although therefore stipulations are found in the Treaties concluded with the Barbary States respecting the protection to be afforded to the Consuls of the European Powers, it must be borne in mind that the Consuls were not accredited to the Barbary Powers, as some writers on International Law assume, but exercised their functions under Treaty-engagements with the Porte itself. Molloy¹⁰, in speaking of the Barbary Powers in the reign of Charles II, misled perhaps by the fact that the Earl of Winchelsea, the Ambassador of England to the Ottoman Porte, concluded a Treaty with the Dey of Algiers on his passage to Constantinople, partakes in the common error of describing them as nests of pirates which, notwithstanding this, "obtain the right of legation and having acquired the reputation of a Government, cannot now possibly be esteemed pirates, but enemies." He had previously described them more correctly as "Governments or States, upon which, although they acknowledged the supremacy of the Ottoman Porte, yet all the Power of it cannot impose more than their own wills voluntarily consent to." The Governments themselves, although de jure held during the pleasure of the Padichah, had become in practice, owing to the weakness of the Porte, Hereditary Regencies. The Regent however on his accession never omitted to claim the sanction of the Sultan, which with an appearance of demur was usually granted on the presentation to his Imperial Majesty of objects more or less valuable, qualified by the Porte as tribute, and by the Regent as a free gift. In cases of war the Regent furnished a contingent, the quality and amount of which he strove to regulate according to circumstances.

⁹ Hertslet's Treaties, II. p. 349.

The Barbary States formerly Hereditary Regencies.

§ 66. The condition of Tunis has undergone in recent times considerable modification. Under a Firman

Anomalous position of Tunis.

¹⁰ De Jure Maritimo, p. 38. § 4.

granted by the Porte on 23 Oct., 1871¹¹, to Mohammed Sadyk Pacha, Bey of Tunis, the province of Tunis within its ancient limits was confirmed to him as an hereditary government to descend to the senior member of his family, relieved from the tribute payable ab antiquo, but liable to furnish a military contingent in case that the Porte should be engaged in a foreign war. No change was to be made in the flag, and money was still to be struck as coin of the Empire. The right of concluding political treaties, of declaring war, making peace, and of assenting to any modification of the frontiers of the Province, was reserved to the Porte as amongst the sacred rights of Sovereignty, but outside those limits the Bey was authorised to maintain as heretofore treaty-relations with Foreign Powers. Accordingly we find a General Convention concluded on July 19, 1874¹², between the Queen of Great Britain and Mohammed Es Sadock Bey, as Lord of the Regency of Tunis, under which the privilege of Consular Jurisdiction was secured to British subjects. A distinction in respect of the exercise of such jurisdiction is observable as between the province of Tripoli and the Regency of Tunis, inasmuch as in the former province the Consular Jurisdiction is exercised in conformity with the capitulations applicable to the other European and Asiatic Provinces of the Ottoman Empire, in pursuance of a Protocol signed at Constantinople on 24 February, 1873, to which Great Britain, France, Italy, and the Porte, were parties, whereas in the Regency of Tunis the Consular Jurisdiction is exercised in accordance with Conventions between the ¹¹ Législation Ottomane, par Démétrius Nicolaïdes. 2^{me} Partie. Constantinople, 1874, p. 147.

¹² N. Recueil Général des Traités, par Samwer et Hopf. 2^{me} Série. Tom. II. p. 479.

Bey of Tunis himself and the respective European Powers.

A somewhat anomalous change has come over this dependency of the Porte, in pursuance of a Treaty of friendship and good neighbourhood signed at Casr-Said on 12 May, 1881, between the Government of the French Republic and His Highness the Bey of Tunis. The two high contracting parties being desirous to prevent the renewal of the disorders, which had recently caused trouble on the frontier of the two States and on the Tunisian Coast, agreed to conclude a Convention for that object in the interest of both the High Contracting Parties. By Article I, it was agreed to confirm all the existing Treaties between the French Republic and the Bey of Tunis. Under Article II, the Bey of Tunis consented that the French Military Authorities should occupy the points which they might deem to be necessary to assure the re-establishment of order and the security of the Frontier and of the Coast. This occupation is to cease, when the French and Tunisian authorities shall recognise by a common accord that the local administration is in a state to guarantee the maintenance of order. By Article III, the Government of the French Republic has engaged itself to afford a constant support to His Highness the Bey of Tunis against every danger, which may menace his person or his dynasty, and which may compromise the tranquillity of his States. By Article IV, the Government of the French Republic has guaranteed the execution of the Treaties actually existing between the Government of the Regency and the various European Powers. By Article V, the Government of the French Republic is to be represented near His Highness the Bey of Tunis by a resident Minister, who shall watch over the execution of the Treaty, and who shall be the intermediary of the relations of the French Government with the Tunisian authorities in all matters concerning the two countries. By Article VI, the Diplomatic and Consular Agents of France in foreign countries are to be charged with the protection of Tunisian interests and of the Nationals of the Regency. In return, the Bey of Tunis has engaged not to conclude any Act of an international character without having made it known to the Government of the French Republic, and having previously come to an understanding with it. The four concluding Articles of the Treaty have reference to matters of finance—a war indemnity to be levied on the tribes in revolt, a prohibition against the introduction of contraband of war into the Algerian territory, and the ratification of the Treaty itself, to which are affixed the signatures of Mohammed Es Sadock Bey on the one part, and of General Bréart, the Representative of France, on the other part ¹³.

It does not appear from any published document that the assent of the Suzerain Power has been given to the French Protectorate, on the contrary, the Porte appears to have protested¹⁴ against this Treaty (12 June, 1881), and has declined to recognise its validity on the occasion of the French Consul-General in Tripoli claiming the right of protecting natives of Tunis within that Vilayet of the Porte. Further, the French Government has asserted a similar right of protection over Tunisian subjects settled in Egypt, which is still a dependency of the Porte, notwithstanding the Sultan, in his Firman of 23 Oct., 1871, has declared formally all Tunisian subjects to be his subjects. Mohammed Es Sadock Bey has subsequently to his acceptance of a French Protectorate, abdicated the Regency of Tunis, and his next brother, Sidi-Ali, pursuant to the order of succession in his family, established under the Firman already mentioned, has succeeded to the Regency on 28 Oct., 1882.

¹³ Nouveau Recueil Général des Traités, par Samwer et Hopf. 2^{me} Série. Tom. VI. p. 507.

¹⁴ Despatch from the Porte to the Ottoman Ambassador in London. Das Staats-Archiv. 1881, p. 11.

The Protectorate, which France has undertaken under the provisions of the Treaty of 12 May, 1881, and which she claims to exercise over Tunisians in foreign countries, deserves some remarks, as the exercise of such a Protectorate without a previous recognition of the Treaty Right by the Suzerain Powers and by the Powers within whose territory it is sought to be exercised, may be regarded as a novelty. The Protectorate which Russia claimed to exercise over Ottoman subjects within the Danubian Principalities, was in virtue of Treaties with the Ottoman Porte, and was only of concern to the Ottoman Porte itself, the exercise of whose Sovereignty within its own territorial dependencies was liable to be affected by it. But the Protectorate, which the French Republic claims to exercise over Tunisians in foreign countries, in pursuance of Article VI of the Treaty of Casr-Said, concerns foreign countries, inasmuch as it may conflict with Treaty Rights conceded by those countries to the Suzerain Power. It has, as regards foreign countries, some analogy to the Protectorate which the King of Great Britain and Ireland exercised in foreign countries, over the natives of the Ionian Islands, before the Seven Islands were united to the Kingdom of Greece in 1863. But before the King of Great Britain and Ireland advanced any claim to exercise a Protectorate over Ionian subjects in foreign countries, the provisions of the Conventions between Great Britain and her three Allies, Russia, Austria, and Prussia, who had a Treaty Right of joint disposal over the most important of the Seven Islands, had received a general recognition from the European Powers at the Congress of Vienna. Further, the Ottoman Porte renounced its sovereign rights over the Islands and their dependencies in favour of Great Britain as the Sovereign Protector by a Special Act (24 April, 1819), and by that Act recognised the inhabitants of the said Isles as subjects of the Protecting Power, and as entitled within the Turkish Empire to the benefits secured to British subjects under the ancient Capitulations of Great Britain with the Ottoman Porte.

§ 67. The condition of Egypt, which is in theory a Vilayet of the Ottoman Empire, but is practically a vassal State, is the result of an International Compact, as, although it has been in form settled by a Firman under the Cypher (Tugra) of the Padichah of the Ottomans addressed to Mehemet Ali Pacha on Feb. 12, 1841, that Settlement was the result of an agreement between the Porte and four of the Great European Powers, and gave effect to a Treaty concluded between them and the Porte on 15 July, 1840. Further it was approved by those Powers¹⁵ before it was transmitted to Mehemet Ali. The history of Mehemet Ali, the founder of the present Egyptian dynasty, is singular. He was born at Kavala in Roumelia in 1769, and came to Egypt in 1803, in command of some Albanian irregular troops in attendance upon the Pacha of the day. He remained in Egypt upon the Pacha's return to Europe, and subsequently took part with his troops in Khosrew ¹⁵ British and Foreign State Papers, vol. lix. p. 577.

Pacha's campaign against the Mamelukes. After the disastrous battle of Damanhur near Cairo, he was deprived by Khosrew Pacha of his command, whereupon he joined the Mamelukes, and putting himself at their head drove Khosrew Pacha back to Damietta. He shortly afterwards (1805) obtained from the Porte the investiture of the Pachalik of Egypt. The political power, however, of the Mamelukes still survived, although their military strength had been broken by General Bonaparte at the battle of the Pyramids (21 July, 1798). The division of Egypt into twenty-four Beyliks dates from the Conquest of Egypt by the Turks in 1517, when the Sultan Selim I, having vanquished and dethroned the last Mameluke Prince of the Circassian dynasty, converted Egypt into a Turkish Pachalik, and surrounded the Pacha with a Mameluke Council consisting of the Governors of the twenty-four Beyliks. The Mameluke Beys, who were intended to act as a salutary check upon the Sultan's Representative, gradually became the Masters of Egypt, and so remained, until they were annihilated on 1 March, 1811, by the craft and treachery of Mehemet Ali. It was not until after that event that it became possible for the Pacha of Egypt to raise the Standard of Independence against the Porte. Meanwhile, during the Greek war of Independence, Mehemet Ali sent troops to the assistance of the Porte, and the Egyptian fleet under the command of his adopted son Ibrahim Pacha came into collision with the British, Russian, and French fleets off Navarino on 20 October, 1827. Mehemet Ali was rewarded by the Porte at the close of that war with the government of the Island of Candia. Taking advantage of the weakness of the Porte Mehemet Ali determined in 1831 to make an effort to obtain complete independence. His son, Ibrahim Pacha, invaded Syria, and overran Asia Minor, defeating Reschid Pacha at Konieh, and he ultimately threatened Constantinople itself, when the intervention of a Russian Fleet, which cast anchor in the Bosphorus on 20 Feb., 1833, alone saved the throne of the Padichah. The Convention of Kutaya (5 May, 1833) put an end to hostilities, and gave to Mehemet Ali the whole of Syria and the Pachalik of Adana, subject however to the Suzerainty of the Porte. In the war, which subsequently ensued, the victories of Mehemet Ali threatened again to impair the integrity of the Ottoman Empire and the independence of the Ottoman Sultan's throne, which circumstance led to the intervention of Great Britain, Austria, Prussia, and Russia in the interests of the peace of Europe.

These Powers accordingly became parties to a Quadruple Treaty with the Porte (Treaty of London, 15 July, 1840), under which they agreed to enforce against Mehemet Ali the provisions of an arrangement settled between themselves and the Porte, the details of which were specified in a separate Act annexed to the Treaty. Fortune no longer favoured the arms of Mehemet Ali, and Ibrahim Pacha was compelled to evacuate Syria. Mehemet Ali had thereupon to renounce possession of Candia and of Syria and of the Hedjaz which he had acquired by the Treaty of Kutaya, and to content himself with the hereditary Pachalik of Egypt, subject to the payment of an annual tribute of 80,000 purses. France stood aloof from any direct participation in this Treaty, but seconded the result by her moral influence at Alexandria¹⁶. Accordingly, by a Hatti Cherif of 12 Feb., 1841, confirmed and enlarged by an Imperial Firman of 1 June, 1841, Mehemet Ali was appointed Vali, or Governor-General of Egypt with a right of succession secured to the eldest born of his male children and grandchildren, subject, however, to the nomination of the Padichah. This order of succession was maintained in the case of his eldest son Ibrahim Pacha, who was nominated Vali in January, 1848, before his father's death, in consequence of Mehemet Ali's incapacity from old age, Mehemet Ali having at that time entered his eightieth year. Ibrahim Pacha predeceased his aged father and was succeeded in November, 1848, by his nephew Abbas Pacha, the son of Toussoun Pacha, who was the second son of Mehemet Ali. Abbas Pacha bears the reputation of having been a vicious and rapacious ruler, and he was strangled by his own Kawasses in his palace at Benha on the Damietta branch of the Nile. He had, however, the merit of dying without debts. Said Pacha, the fourth Hereditary Vali of Egypt, was the sixth son of Mehemet Ali, although he was junior in point of age to his nephew Abbas Pacha. He was an enlightened and capable ruler, and reigned nearly twenty years, during which Egypt made great progress, although her expenditure soon began to be in excess of her revenue. He contracted the first foreign loan, and granted in 1856, subject to the confirmation of the Porte, a Charter for piercing the Isthmus of Suez to the Universal Company, over which M. Ferdinand de Lesseps presides. He did not live to see the Suez Canal completed, but he laid down the railways from Alexandria to Cairo, and from Cairo to Suez. Said Pacha died on 10 January, 1863, leaving a heavy burden of debt to his successor. He was succeeded, in accordance with the Firman of 1841, by Ismail

¹⁶ Memorandum of M. Thiers, Oct. 1840). Martens, N. R. Minister of Foreign Affairs (5 Général, I. p. 183.

Pacha, the second son of Ibrahim Pacha and the senior member of the family of Mehemet Ali, the founder of the dynasty. In the third year after his succession to the government of Egypt Ismail Pacha obtained from the Padichah a Firman bearing date 2 May, 1866, by which a new order of succession was established in favour of his direct heirs male in the order of primogeniture. This Firman recognised the complete autonomy of the Governor-General of Egypt in all internal affairs, and authorised him to contract foreign loans and to enter into Commercial treaties with the agents of Foreign Powers, provided they did not conflict with the political treaties of the Porte.

By a previous Firman of May, 1865¹⁶, the ports of Massawah and of Souakim together with the Province of Taka had been granted to Ismail Pacha on the two-fold condition of paying to the Government of Djeddah an annual contribution of 7,500 purses, and of suppressing the Slave trade. The Kaimakamates of Souakim and of Massawah were declared by the Firman of 27 May, 1866, to be hereditary, and to pass with the Government of Egypt to the heirs male of Ismail Pacha. Souakim is on an island in the Red Sea, and was formerly an important depot for the Slave trade. The export trade of the Soudan passes through it, whilst Massawah is a neighbouring island, and is the chief seaport for the produce of Abyssinia. Further, by this Firman the annual tribute payable by Egypt was increased from 80,000 purses to 150,000 purses, and further provided for the case of the Vali dying without direct heirs male, in which case the inheritance was to pass to his eldest brother, and in default of a brother surviving him, to the eldest son of his eldest brother, and so on.

¹⁶ British and Foreign State Papers, vol. lxvii. p. 181.

To pass over other Imperial Firmans of minor importance, it will suffice to notice the contents of a Firman of June 8, 1867, addressed "to My illustrious Vizier Ismail Pacha, who now holds the rank of Grand Vizier with the title of 'Khidev' of Egypt." By this Firman the Khedive obtained the confirmation of his autonomy in all matters of internal government, and was authorised to frame such regulations as might seem to him necessary in the form of a Special Tanzimat for Egypt¹⁷. Further, he obtained full powers in all matters relating to the police, postal, and transit services, and as regards Customs duties was authorised to enter into special arrangements with foreign agents, provided that such arrangements should not have any political signification or purport. A further Firman was granted to Ismail Pacha, bearing date June 8, 1873¹⁸, to consolidate and as it were to complete the previous firmans as to the succession, and further to provide for a Regency in case the nearest male heir should be under eighteen years of age. This Firman gave the Khedive permission to maintain an unlimited number of Imperial troops, but forbade him to construct ironclad ships of war without the permission of the Sultan. Further, it authorised him to contract without leave in the name of the Egyptian Government any foreign loan which he might think necessary: further, "to renew and to contract (without interfering with the political treaties of the Sublime Porte) conventions with the agents ¹⁷ Hitherto the Tanzimat of 3 Nov., 1839, which had been published at Gul-Hane, and was the general law of the Empire, had been in force in Egypt.

¹⁸ Législation Ottomane. Deuxième Partie. Droit Public

Intérieur, p. 140. Constantinople, 1874. Samwer and Hopf. Traité, N. R. Général. Tom. XVIII. p. 629. Parliamentary Paper, C. 2395. Egypt, No. 4 (1879).

of Foreign Countries for Customs and Trade, and for all relations which concern foreigners, and all the affairs of the country, internal or otherwise, with the object of developing commerce and industry; and to arrange the police for foreigners as well as their position, and all their relations with the Government and the populations." In pursuance with the powers conferred by this Firman a novel international factor was introduced into Egypt in 1875 by Ismail Pacha after the details had been for seven years a subject of discussion with the various Christian Powers of Europe, namely, a system of mixed tribunals of Justice in substitution for the Consular Tribunals. The initiation of these mixed tribunals was due to the Khedive's Minister Nubar Pacha, an Armenian Christian, who was supported by Cherif Pacha and Riaz Pacha, also Ministers of the Khedive, and who acted in concert with Aali Pacha, the Grand Vizier of the Sultan. By the institution of these mixed tribunals the administration of justice was made independent of the Executive Government of Egypt, as well as of the Foreign Consuls. To examine the constitution of these Tribunals and to suggest improvements in their procedure would be here out of place, but one defect in them deserves to be noticed, for it was fraught with serious consequences to their founder. It was inevitable that questions should be brought before the mixed tribunals, in which the Khedive would be himself a party, and no provision was made to regulate the procedure of the tribunals in such cases, so as to maintain a formal respect for the Sovereignty of the Khedive, whilst substantial justice was assured to the subject who sued his Sovereign. For instance, in England no subject can bring a civil action against the Sovereign in the same form in which he can sue a subject of the Crown, he must proceed by way of Petition of Right instead of by Writ of the Crown, but this exceptional method of proceeding does not in any way interfere with the substantial administration of justice, whilst it preserves respect for the Sovereign Power. In Egypt, on the contrary, the mixed tribunals had no other resource in cases where the Khedive was a party than to assert a power on their part superior to that of the Sovereign of the State, and so a conflict arose between the Courts and the Executive, in which as the European Powers supported the Courts, the prestige of the Sovereign Power was lowered. In fact, it has been said of Ismail Pacha and of the judicial reforms which he introduced, that he was destroyed by "his own offspring." Notwithstanding the shortcomings, however, which of necessity were to be expected in the working of these novel tribunals, there can be no doubt that much good has resulted from them. They were, it must be admitted, a compromise between the privileged jurisdiction of the foreign consuls and the corruption of the native Courts, but no better proof can be given of the value of the mixed tribunals than the efforts, which the native population are in the habit of making, to have their cases heard before them in preference to the native Courts.

Unfortunately, however, for the Khedive, his haste to realise his enthusiastic schemes for placing Egypt in the first rank of civilised nations led him into the grave financial error of contracting an enormous debt, amounting in 1878 to more than ninety millions of pounds sterling, which caused the general exasperation of an over-taxed people, an unpaid army, and starving officials; and in June, 1879, the Sultan was induced to issue a Hatti Cherif, deposing the Khedive Ismail and substituting his eldest son Tewfik Pacha in his place. Ismail, upon the advice of the British and French Consuls-General, submitted to the Sultan's Order and abdicated the Khedivate, and by an Imperial Firman of 2 August, 1879¹⁹, his son Tewfik Pacha was called to the Khedivate with the high rank of "Tédaret Effectif." This Firman, however, as contrasted with that of 1873, imposed certain limitations on the autonomy of the Khedive, inasmuch as Tewfik Pacha is forbidden by it to contract any foreign loans save with the object of regulating the existing Financial situation of Egypt, and with the full assent of its existing creditors. He is also required to communicate to the Porte any commercial treaties which he may conclude with the agents of Foreign Powers before he promulgates them, and by a note addressed to the British Ambassador at Constantinople on 29 July, 1879²⁰, the Porte has explained this provision of the Firman, that it is not intended to require the Khedive to obtain the sanction of the Porte to any such treaty before practical effect is given to it, but that it reserves to the Porte the right of refusing to recognise it, if it should be inconsistent with any political treaty of the Porte's. Further, the money of Egypt is to be coined in the name of the Sultan; the army of the Khedive is not to exceed 18,000 men, except if the Porte should be engaged in war. The flag and the uniform of the troops are to be identical with those of the Porte, and the Khedive is not to construct any ironclad vessel of war without the express authorisation of the Porte. The Khedive is further prohibited from alienating

¹⁹ Samwer and Hopf., *Traité*s, 2^{me} Série. Tom. VI. p. 508.

²⁰ An official translation of the firman of Aug. 2 had been communicated to the British and French Ambassadors at Constantinople before it was transmitted to Tewfik Pacha, together with a declaration explaining the restrictions in it.

to others, in whole or in part, the privileges which have been accorded to Egypt and entrusted to him as an emanation of the prerogatives inherent in the Sovereign Power, or any portion of territory. Of this latter provision, the Ambassadors of France and of England received a Joint Note of explanation to be transmitted to their respective Governments.

§ 68. The Principality of Samos occupies an anomalous position amongst the tributaries of the Ottoman Empire. The island of Samos, under the territorial system of the Sultan Mahmoud II, was a Sandjak in the Vilayet of Djizair or the Isles, of which the Vali or Governor-General resided at Rhodes. The Samians had cast in their lot with the inhabitants of the Morea in 1821 in their struggle for Independence against the Porte, and during the Conferences of the Three Powers, which ultimately guaranteed the independence of Greece, the President of the Provisional Hellenic State, Count Capo d'Istrias, had interceded in vain to obtain a maritime frontier for Greece, which would have included Samos amongst the Hellenic Islands. The exclusion of Samos from the limits of the new Kingdom of Greece was one of the difficulties which prevented Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg definitively accepting the Hellenic throne. Notwithstanding the adverse decision of the Three Powers, Samos continued her struggle for independence, and it was not until 1835 that she made her submission to the Porte in accordance with the provisions of a Firman issued by the Sultan as far back as 10 December, 1832, which had been communicated to France, Great Britain, and Russia²¹. The Three Powers had previously put on record their joint resolution in a Protocol of 20 Feb. 1830 to assure to the inhabitants of the Isle of Samos their protection against any act of oppression on the part of the Porte. The result was a concession²² to the Samians on the part of the Sultan of the privilege of being governed by a President and Council, the President to be nominated by the Sultan and to be of the same religion as the Samians, and also to have the title of Prince ; the Council to be chosen, according to custom, from the Notables of the Island. Under the Firman of the Sultan, the Samians have their own mercantile flag, and the Prince has a veto on the deliberations of the Council with regard to all external matters. He has also the control of the police of the island, and the option of granting to foreigners permission to reside there. No armed troops are allowed within the island, and the island pays to the Porte an annual tribute of 400,000 piastres. The Metropolitan Bishop of Samos is nominated by the Greek Patriarch of Constantinople. He is also Bishop of Ikaria, and is a member of the Greek Orthodox Church, to which almost the entire population of the island belongs. It was with great reluctance and under strong constraint imposed upon them by the Three Powers that the Samians accepted in 1835 these conditions, in accordance with which the island enjoys an administrative independence in the present day.

²¹ Baron de Testa. Recueil des Traités de la Porte Ottomane. Tom. II. p. 399.

Principality of Bulgaria.

§ 69. The Hatti Cherif of Gulkhanè, promulgated by the Sultan Abdul Medjid on 3 November, 1839, upon the advice of Redchid Pacha, his Grand Vizier, decreed the principle of civil equality amongst all the subjects of the Ottoman Empire. The reverses, which the armies of the Padichah had experienced in several ²² Législation Ottomane, par Aristarchi Bey. 2^{me} Partie, p. 147. Constantinople, 1874.

campaigns against the forces of Mehemet Ali, had previously suggested to Sultan Mahmoud II the necessity of attaching to his throne the Christian populations of his Empire, and he was also desirous to prevent the emigration of his Christian subjects from his dominions into the new Hellenic Kingdom. These two motives will serve to explain the origin of the change in the policy of the Porte, which was initiated by Mahmoud II and continued by his successor, Abdul Medjid. The Christian populations in European Turkey were not confined to the Christian Dependencies of the Porte, to wit, Servia and the two Danubian Principalities, but they constituted the bulk of the inhabitants of the ancient Bulgaria, which had been divided by Mahmoud II into three Vilayets, to wit, that of the Danube, Niche, and Sofia, as well as the ancient Roumelia divided into four Vilayets, to wit, Scodra (Scutari in Albania), Yania (Yanina), Monastir, and Selanik (Salonica). Further, a considerable Christian population of Servian origin dwelt alongside of and outnumbered the Mussulman population in Bosnia and Herzegovina. It is necessary to be familiar with the peculiar distribution of the Christian populations in the European provinces of the Ottoman Empire, in order to appreciate the labours of the Congress of Berlin, which lasted from June 13 to July 13, 1878, and which has accomplished for Eastern Europe a settlement hardly less important than that which the Congress of Vienna achieved in 1815 for Western Europe. It should also be borne in mind that the mass of the Christian populations in the Vilayets above mentioned are of Slavic not of Greek race, and whilst the ancient aristocracy of Bulgaria and of Roumelia has disappeared, the Bosniak Beys have maintained their ascendancy over the Christians in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and have prevented due effect being given to the Hatti Cherif of Gulkhanè already mentioned, and to the subsequent Hatti-Houmaïoun of 1856, issued by the Sultan after the Peace of Paris of 30 March, 1856. It was the sad condition of the Christians in Bosnia and Herzegovina, notwithstanding that their serfage under the Bosniak Beys had been abolished by the Porte in 1851, that gave rise to the troubles which led to the Conferences of the European Powers at Constantinople in 1877. It was attempted at those Conferences to maintain the integrity of the Ottoman Empire, but the Powers were unable to arrive at a common understanding, and a war between Russia and the Porte ensued, in which the Christian Principalities of the Porte threw in their lot with Russia against the Suzerain Power, and succeeded in establishing their independence as explained more fully in the next following chapter.

To pass by the conditions under which the Porte has agreed to recognise the independence of Servia, of Roumania, and of Montenegro, which accordingly are no longer under the dominion of the Ottoman Porte, important modifications have been made by the Treaty of Berlin in the relations of Bulgaria and of Roumelia to the Suzerain Power. By Article I of that Treaty, Bulgaria is constituted an autonomous principality, paying tribute to the Porte, under a Christian government, and with a national militia. The Prince of Bulgaria is to be openly elected by the population, and his election is to be confirmed by the Porte with the assent of the Signatory Powers. No member of the reigning Dynasties of the Great European Powers can be elected Prince of Bulgaria. A difference of religious belief cannot be objected to any person as a motive of exclusion or of incapacity in what regards the enjoyment of civil or political rights within the principality. Perfect liberty of religious worship is assured to Bulgarian subjects as well as to strangers. All foreign treaties of commerce and of navigation, as well as all conventions between Foreign Powers and the Porte, are maintained in the Principality of Bulgaria, and no change can be made in them without the consent of the Power interested. The immunities of the subjects of foreign powers, as well as the privileged jurisdiction of their consular tribunals, are maintained until they shall be modified by consent. The amount of tribute payable to the Suzerain Power is to be settled by an accord amongst the Signatory Powers, as well as the portion of the Public debt of the Empire to be charged upon the Principality. No Ottoman troops are to be quartered in the Principality, and all the ancient fortresses are to be destroyed at the expense of the Principality. Bulgarian subjects who shall travel or reside in other parts of the Ottoman Empire shall be subject to Ottoman law. In pursuance of Article III of the same Treaty of Berlin, Prince Alexander Joseph of the Grand Ducal Family of Hesse, and first cousin of the reigning Grand Duke of Hesse, was unanimously elected Prince of Bulgaria on 29 April, 1879 by a Constituent Assembly. He assumed the reins of government on 28 June, 1879, under the title of Prince Alexander I.

§ 70. By Article XIII of the same treaty of Berlin, a province has been formed to the South of the Balkans, under the name of Eastern Roumelia. This province is under the direct political and military authority of his Imperial Majesty the Sultan, under the conditions of administrative autonomy, with a Christian Governor-General, who is to be nominated by the Porte for a period of five years with the assent of the Signatory Powers. The Porte is to have a right of garrison in the fortresses, but no troops are to be quartered on the inhabitants, and internal order is to be maintained by a native body of armed police. The Governor-General may invoke the aid of Ottoman troops to maintain the internal or external security of the Province, but notice of any necessity which justifies such aid shall be given to the Signatory Powers. Further, an European Commission is to organize, in accord with the Ottoman Porte, an administrative constitution for Eastern Roumelia. All the Treaties and Conventions concluded between the Porte and Foreign Powers apply to Eastern Roumelia. Foreigners are to have the same privileges and immunities as in other parts of the Ottoman Empire, and religious liberty is assured to every form of worship. It will be seen that the international checks upon the exercise of the Porte's Sovereignty over Eastern Roumelia are very slight. The Signatory Powers have a consultative voice in the appointment of a Governor-General, who must be a Christian, and the Sultan has admitted an obligation on his part towards the European Powers of maintaining perfect religious liberty within the limits of the Province of Eastern Roumelia, as specified in Article XIV of the Treaty of Berlin.

The Lebanon.

§ 71. The condition of the Lebanon has been one of almost continuous civil warfare between the Maronites and the Druses, since the evacuation of Syria by Mehemet Ali, which took place in 1841²³, in con-

²³ British and Foreign State Papers, vol. I. p. 6.

sequence of the intervention of the Four Christian Powers, pursuant to the Treaty of London of 1840. At last, in 1860, the Five Christian Powers, France having again joined the European Concert, determined to co-operate with the Porte in effecting a Pacification of Syria, and in pursuance of a Convention signed at Paris, Sept. 5, 1860, a body of European troops in conjunction with a fleet by sea accomplished the object of the Convention, and in the following year a Conference of the Five Powers in conjunction with Turkey was held at Constantinople. In pursuance of a Protocol adopted by this Conference, the Porte issued an Organic "Règlement pour l'Administration du Liban," dated 9 June, 1861²⁴, under which it was arranged that the Lebanon henceforth should be administered by a Christian Governor-General, nominated by the Porte under a previous understanding with the Christian Powers. This Règlement was in fact the work of an International Commission, and after various amendments had been introduced by the Conference, it was finally accepted by the Representatives of the Christian Powers and promulgated by His Imperial Majesty the Sultan under the form of a Firman. In accordance with this Protocol the Governor-General of the Lebanon was to hold office for three years. At the end, however, of the first three years a Conference of the Six Powers was assembled at Constantinople, and agreed to a further confirmation of the then Governor-General in his post for five years. A still further change was made in the tenure of the Governor-General's office, at a Conference held at Kanlidja on 15 July, 1868²⁵, when it was agreed that the duration of the Mandate of Franco Nasri Pacha should not be less than ten years. Subsequently, in consequence of the death of Franco Nasri Pacha, a Conference of the Powers was held at Constantinople, 22 April, 1873²⁶, and the Five Christian Powers recorded their assent by anticipation to the nomination of Rustem Pacha for a period of ten years. The term of this last-named Wali expired in the present year, and Wasa Effendi, an Albanian Catholic, has been proposed by the Porte and has been accepted by the Five Powers at a Conference held in Constantinople. The Governor-General of the Lebanon, under the terms of the Règlement Organique of 1861, has plenary Administrative Power, nominates the executive and judicial officers, collects the revenue, which is fixed at 3500 purses, out of which the expenses of the administration are to be defrayed, and the balance only, if any, is to be remitted to the Porte. In fact, the Règlement Organique, to which are subscribed the names of the representatives of all the Six Powers, is a Charter of the Liberties of the Mountain.

²⁴ British and Foreign State Papers, vol. li. p. 288. Mar- tens, Traité, N. R. G. Tom. XVII. part ii. p. 107.

Bosnia and Herzegovina.

§ 72. The conditions of the Provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina are somewhat anomalous, as they are under the provisions of the Treaty of Berlin, to be occupied and administered by Austria-Hungary, and Austria-Hungary has reserved to herself the right of garrison and of free military communication throughout the Sandjak of Novibazar, which extends between Servia and Montenegro. The administration of this Sandjak in other respects is to be exercised by the Porte. The Peace of San Stefano had provided that the European proposals communicated to the Ottoman Porte in regard to these Provinces in the First Sitting of the Conference of Constantinople, 1877, should be at once introduced, subject to such modifications as should be agreed upon between Russia, Austria-Hungary, and the Porte. Those proposals involved an administrative autonomy of the widest kind, under a Governor-General named by the Porte, for five years, with the assent of the European Powers, the autonomy itself to be under the control of an International Commission. This proposed arrangement fell to the ground with other contemplated arrangements submitted to the Powers represented in those Conferences. Meanwhile, on the breaking out of war between Russia and the Porte, in which Servia and Roumania took part, Austria-Hungary, with a view to prevent an internecine conflict between the Christian and Mussulman population of Bosnia and Herzegovina, effected a military occupation of the two Provinces on her own responsibility. The future conditions of that occupation are expressly reserved by Article XXV of the Treaty of Berlin to a common understanding between Austria-Hungary and the Porte.

²⁵ British and Foreign State Papers, vol. lxi. p. 1029. Martens, *Traité*s, N. R. G. XVIII. p. 233.
²⁶ State Papers, vol. lxiii. p. 227.

§ 73. The International Status of the Island of Cyprus. Cyprus bears some analogy to that of Bosnia and Herzegovina, with the exception that the Status of the latter Provinces has been formally recognised in an Act of the Congress of Berlin, to which the Porte was a party, whereas that of Cyprus is founded on a Treaty of Alliance between Great Britain and the Porte. The preliminaries of the Peace, which the successful campaign of 1877 had enabled Russia to impose upon the Porte at San Stefano, under which Ardahan, Kars, Batoum, Bayazid, and the territory as far as Saganlough (Art. XIX), were ceded to Russia as an equivalent for a portion of the indemnity claimed by Russia for the expenses of the war, were considered by Great Britain to give to Russia not merely the most important Eastern port of the Black Sea and the possession of the Frontier fortresses, but also the control over the transit of trade from Trebisonde to Persia, which would be highly detrimental to the Turks. Russia, in a Memorandum signed at London 30 May, 1878, agreed to renounce her claim to Bayazid and the Valley of Alashkert, along which the great caravan route of commerce runs between Trebisonde and Persia. She did not however assent to reduce in other respects the proposed extension of her frontier, and Great Britain did not hesitate to avow to Russia that she foresaw in the future great danger to the tranquillity of the populations of Turkey in Asia as the result of that extension, and further, that she reserved to herself the right to take such measures as she might think necessary to protect her own interests and her own influence over those populations. The result was that on 4 June, 1878, Great Britain concluded an Alliance with the Porte of the following tenor :—

“If Batoum, Ardahan, Kars, or any of them shall be retained by Russia, and if any attempt shall be made at any future time by Russia to take possession of any further territories of his Imperial Majesty the Sultan in Asia, as fixed by the definitive Treaty of Peace, England engages to join His Imperial Majesty the Sultan in defending them by force of arms.

“In return, His Imperial Majesty the Sultan promises to England to introduce necessary reforms, to be agreed upon later between the two Powers, into the Government and for the protection of the Christian and other subjects of the Porte in these territories; and in order to enable England to make necessary provision for executing her engagement, His Imperial Majesty the Sultan further consents to assign the Island of Cyprus to be occupied and administered by England²⁷."

The Congress of Berlin commenced its deliberations on 13 June, 1878. Its main object was to settle a definitive Peace between the Porte and Russia, and the Asiatic frontier between the two countries was the subject of discussion on 6 July, 1878. Russia on this occasion maintained her frontier line in accordance with the Memorandum of 30 May, 1878, but made one further concession in announcing her intention to declare Batoum to be a Free-port of Commerce. The result was that Batoum, Ardahan, and Kars were retained by Russia, and the contingency was not realised under which the Treaty of Alliance between England and the Porte would have been at an end, inasmuch as an Annexe had been appended to the Treaty of 4 June, pending the Session of the Congress, of this tenor:—

"Art. VI. If Russia restores to Turkey Kars and the other conquests made by her in Armenia during the last war, the Island of Cyprus will be evacuated by England, and the Convention of 4 June, 1878, will be at an end."

It appears from a Dispatch from the Marquis of Salisbury to Sir A. H. Layard, the British Ambassador at Constantinople, of May 30, 1878²⁸, that it was not the intention of Great Britain to ask the ²⁷ N. R. Général des Traités. Correspondence respecting the Samwer and Hopf. 2^{me} Série. the convention between Great Britain and Turkey of June 4, 1878. Tom. III. p. 272.

²⁸ Turkey, No. 36 (1878). Parliamentary Papers, 1878.

Sultan by the above Treaty to alienate territory from his Sovereignty, or to diminish the receipts which pass into his Treasury. They therefore proposed that while the administration and occupation of the Island shall be assigned to the Queen of Great Britain, the territory shall still continue to be part of the Ottoman Empire, and that the excess of revenue over the expenditure, whatever it might at that time be, shall be paid annually by the British Government into the Treasury of the Sultan. Accordingly the third Article of the Annexe provides that England shall pay to the Porte whatever is the present excess of revenue over expenditure in the island; this excess to be calculated upon and determined by the average of the last five years, as stated to be 22,936 purses, to be duly verified hereafter and to the exclusion of the produce of State or Crown lands let or sold during that period.

The scope of this Convention was further explained in a letter from the Marquis of Salisbury to M. Waddington, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, of 7 July, 1878, in which his Lordship says, "How long the occupation will continue it is impossible to foresee, but Her Majesty's Government are not without hope that Russian Statesmen will in due time satisfy themselves, that the territory they have acquired is costly and unproductive, will recognise the futility of any plans which in any quarters may have been formed for making it a stepping-stone to future conquests, and will abandon it as an useless acquisition.

"In that case our raison d'être at Cyprus will be at an end, and we shall retire ²⁹."

²⁹ Turkey, No. 48 (1878). Parliamentary Paper.

CHAPTER V.

THE KINGDOMS OF THE LOWER DANUBE.

The ancient Principality of Servia—Treaties of Sistova, Bucharest, Adrianople, and Ackerman—Organic Statute of Servia, 1838—Its status under the Treaty of Paris of 1856—Anomalous relations of Servia to the Porte after 1876—Its independence recognised under the Treaty of Berlin of 1878—The Prince recognised by the European Powers as King in 1882—Ancient Principalities of Walachia and Moldavia—Treaties of Carlovitz, Kutschuk-Kainardji, Bucharest, Adrianople, and St. Petersburg—Convention of Balta-Liman—Treaty of Paris, 30 March, 1856—Subsequent changes in the status of Walachia and Moldavia—Union of the two Principalities into one State under the name of Roumania in 1865—Its independence recognised by the Porte and by the European Powers in 1878—Retrocession by Roumania of territory in Bessarabia previously ceded by Russia under Treaty of Paris of 1856—The Prince of Roumania recognised as King in 1881—The Principality of Montenegro—Treaties of Carlovitz, Passarovitz, and Sistova—Congress of Paris of 1856—The independence of Montenegro acknowledged by the Porte under the Treaty of San Stefano of 3 March, 1878, and generally recognised by the Signatory Powers of the Treaty of Berlin on 13 July, 1878.

§ 74. AN improved organization of the Christian Dependencies of the Ottoman Empire situated in Europe was one of the objects in view, when a general Treaty of Peace was signed at Paris on 30 March, 1856, between Great Britain, Austria, France, Prussia, Russia, Sardinia and Turkey, and when it was thought desirable and practicable to maintain the integrity of the Ottoman Empire. Those Dependencies had always maintained relations with the Porte of a different character from those of the Mahommedan Dependencies. They consisted of the Principality of Servia,

The Principality of Servia, now the kingdom of Servia.

the two Danubian Principalities as they were sometimes termed, namely, Walachia and Moldavia, and the Prince-Bishopric of Montenegro. Servia is the most important of these States, whether we regard its political antecedents, or its present military power. The Servians in the Twelfth Century had laid the foundation of an Empire, which underwent rapid development and which embraced, in the middle of the Fourteenth Century prior to the Ottoman Invasion, all Macedonia, certain towns in Thessaly and Albania, and portions of Thrace. The Independence of Servia terminated with the disastrous battle of Kossova, (15 June, 1389,) after which event its territory was divided by its Ottoman conquerors into various Pachaliks, the chief of which was established at Belgrade. It was not until the commencement of the present century, (anno 1804,) that the Servians awakened to the recollection of their former Independence, and rose in insurrection against the Janissaries of Belgrade, who in defiance of the stipulations of the Treaty of Sistova¹ (4 August, 1791) had re-occupied Servia and were perpetrating cruelties of the most atrocious character. The Servians, under the leadership of Kara George, and with the countenance of the Porte itself, succeeded in expelling the Janissaries out of Servia, and afterwards finding their newly acquired liberty too sweet to be relinquished, resolved to establish a National Government with Kara George as its Chief (Vosd). The Russian Government had meanwhile undertaken to advocate the cause of the Servians with the Porte, and when war broke out in 1806 between Russia and the Porte, the Servians having successfully laid siege to Belgrade, joined their forces to those of Russia. The peace of

Treaty of Sistova,
4 Aug.
1791.

¹ Martens, Recueil, Tom. V. p. 244.

Bucharest (28 May, 1812²) left the Servians practically at the mercy of the Porte, although Russia had made certain highly favourable stipulations on their behalf in her treaty with the Porte, and Servia was thereupon once more reduced to the condition of a Turkish Province. But the spirit of Independence amongst the Servians was not extinguished. It broke forth at intervals, was countenanced by Russia, and at last, with the support of that Power, Servia obtained from the Porte the recognition of its administrative Independence, in pursuance of the provisions of the Treaty of Adrianople³ (14 Sept. 1829) concluded between Russia and the Ottoman Porte. This recognition took place under the form of a Hatti Cherif, (29 Nov. 1829,) in which the Sultan declared, that having regard to the Treaties of Bucharest and Adrianople, as well as to the Convention of Ackerman⁴, (7 Oct. 1826,) and likewise to the prayers of the Servians, who had always been faithful subjects of his Empire, he had accorded to them the liberty of Christian Worship, and an Independent Internal administration, with various other privileges in accordance with the provisions of a separate Act annexed to the Treaty of Ackerman. The political Constitution of Servia was subsequently settled by an Organic Statute, issued by the Sultan in 1838. This Statute conferred the Sovereignty of the Province upon Prince Milosch and his family, the principedom being declared to be hereditary in his family; and after enumerating other matters of detail, conferred upon him (A) the nomination of public functionaries, (B) the command of the troops, (C) the powers of the Exequatur, (D) the collection of the taxes, (E)

Treaty of Bucharest,
28 May,
1812.

Treaty of Adrianople, 14
Sept. 1829.

Treaty of Ackerman,
7 Oct.
1826.

Organic Statute of Servia.

² Martens, N. R. Tom. III.
p. 197.

³ Ibid. VIII. p. 116.

⁴ Ibid. VI. p. 1053.

the control of the provincial authorities, (F) the jurisdiction over criminals. At this period, (anno 1829,) when Lord Ponsonby on behalf of Great Britain was suggesting certain modifications in the Organic Statute, the Sultan refused to recognise any title in Great Britain to interfere in the affairs of Servia, but admitted the right of Russia under her treaties with the Porte to exercise a voice. The Treaty of Paris ⁵, (30 March, 1856,) placed the established relations between Servia and the Ottoman Porte under the collective guaranty of all the Powers which were parties to that treaty. The Suzerainty of the Porte, and its right of garrison as heretofore, were maintained on the one hand; whilst, on the other hand, the Principality of Servia retained its National and administrative Independence, as well as full liberty of worship, legislation, commerce, and navigation; nor could any armed intervention take place in Servia without a previous accord amongst the High Contracting Powers. It would be out of place in the present treatise to follow the fortune of Prince Milosch and his family; it will be sufficient to have traced the International vicissitudes of the Principality, and to have shown how its present anomalous state of International transition is founded upon Treaty-engagements between the European Powers and the Emperor of the Ottomans, in his character of Suzerain.

Servia.

§ 75. To pass over intermediate events of minor importance, it may be sufficient to state that on 22 June, 1876, Prince Milan Obrénovitch, who had been proclaimed Prince of Servia on 2 July, 1868, upon the pretext of defending the Christian populations of Bosnia and Herzegovina against the violent oppres-

⁵ Martens, N. R. Général, XV. p. 770.

sion of the Bosniak Beys, demanded from the Porte its authorisation to take military possession of those two provinces and to administer them permanently, which the Porte refused. War thereupon ensued between the Porte and the Principality, which was brought to a close by a Convention re-establishing the Status quo ante on 28 February, 1877, of which event formal cognisance was taken by the Christian Powers, which were parties to the Treaty of Paris (1856), in a Protocol signed at London on 31 March, 1877. This peace was of short duration, as Serbia again declared war against Turkey on 14 Dec. 1877, on the ground that the Porte had not given full effect to the provisions of the Treaty of Peace of the previous month of February. The Porte thereupon issued a Proclamation on 20 Dec. 1877, declaring that Prince Milan had forfeited his title to the throne of the Principality. These anomalous relations between Serbia and the Porte were put an end to by the Treaty of San Stefano concluded on 3rd March, 1878, between Russia and the Porte, by the third article of which Treaty the Porte recognised the Independence of Serbia. The Independence of the Principality obtained an European recognition from the Powers subsequently assembled in Congress in Berlin, who undertook, in conformity with the Stipulations of the Treaty of Paris (1856), to which they were parties, to regulate in the interest of European Order the questions, which had arisen in the course of the wars between the Ottoman Porte and Russia, to which war the Treaty of San Stefano had put a provisional termination. The result of the deliberations of the Powers in regard to Serbia was embodied in Article XXXIV of the Treaty of Berlin of 13 July, 1878, which recognised the independence of Serbia subject

Independence of Serbia.

The Kingdom of Servia.

to the condition of all religious confessions being allowed complete liberty and civil equality. The Prince Milan Obrénovitch has since assumed the title of King by a Decree of 6 March, 1882, and his title of King of Servia has been recognised by the European Powers.

The Principalities of Walachia and Moldavia, now the Kingdom of Roumania.

§ 76. The Principality of Walachia had paid tribute to the Ottoman Porte since the commencement of the Fifteenth Century, although the Sultans were not really masters of Walachia until the death of Wlad, (anno 1461,) the last Independent Prince. From this period down to 1521, Walachia was governed by its own Voievodes, elected by the Boyards and confirmed by the Sultan. Soleiman I, whose brilliant reign has earned for him from Christian historians the titles of the Great and the Magnificent, but whom the Ottomans have distinguished by the more modest epithet of the Lawgiver, determined to add Walachia substantively to his Empire, and to place over it a Governor of his own choice. He accordingly appointed Mohammed Bey to the post of Sandjakbey of Walachia. This personage, having lulled the Boyards into security by a Treaty, in which he guaranteed to them their ancient privileges, caused the Prince, whom they had elected according to custom, to be assassinated at the moment when the Sultan's Commissary pretended to instal him into office. So flagrant an atrocity led to the armed intervention of the Hungarians under Jean Zapolya, and the Sultan was induced, after a series of disastrous conflicts, to restore the Principality to its ancient condition of a tributary State under an elective Prince. Moldavia, on the other hand, had recognised the Sovereignty of the Ottoman Porte in 1516, and after the campaign of Vienna, Raresch, Prince of Moldavia, did homage to the Sultan Soleiman I, and received from him a diploma which secured to the Christian population the liberty of religious worship, and conferred upon the Boyards the election of the Prince, subject to the ratification of their choice by the Sultan, and to the condition of paying an annual tribute at Constantinople. The fortunes of Moldavia were for a short time mixed up with those of Transylvania, which latter province upon the conclusion of the peace of Sitvatorok, (11 Dec. 1606,) had also become a tributary State of the Ottoman Empire under the government of an Elective Prince. Soon after that event the Estates of Transylvania elected Gabriel Bethlen to be their Voievode, (anno 1613,) who being supported by the Porte in his schemes of territorial aggrandisement against Hungary, but not daring to place upon his own head the ancient Crown of St. Stephen, endeavoured to found a new Empire. In this policy Gabriel Bethlen was supported by England, France, Holland, and the Republic of Venice, and was even permitted by the Sultan to enter directly into political treaties with those Powers. The Emperor Ferdinand II was ultimately fain to conclude two successive treaties⁶ with Gabriel Bethlen as an Independent Prince: and upon the re-establishment of peace between the Emperor and the Sultan, Gabriel Bethlen demanded for himself from the Porte the investiture of the principalities of Moldavia and Walachia, with the title of King of Dacia. The death of Gabriel Bethlen, which happened soon afterwards from natural causes, opened the way to great changes in the condition of the Principalities. Rakcoczy was elected to the office of Voievode by the Estates of Transylvania, and his

Peace of Sitvatorok,
11 Dec.
1606.

⁶ Von Hammer, Histoire de l'Empire Ottoman, IX. p. 118.

election was confirmed by the Ottoman Porte. Moldavia on the other hand, and Walachia, which had hitherto been governed by native Princes, became a prey to the avarice of the Viziers of the Porte, and to the intrigues of Greek and other adventurers, who pretended successively to the Crown of Dacia⁷.

Treaty of Carlowitz,
anno 1699.

The Treaty of Carlowitz⁸ (anno 1699) deprived the Ottoman Porte definitely of its Suzerainty over Transylvania, and soon afterwards the Boyards of Moldavia were authorised by the Sultan to choose as Hospodar (or Farmer of the Province) one of themselves (3 Oct. 1703). The Voievodeship of Walachia was meanwhile sold for the most part to the person who offered the highest rent as Hospodar, and gave the most costly presents to the Grand Vizier. The two Principalities were now and then granted to one and the same person, but the instances of this twofold Investiture are very rare.

Treaty of Kutschuk-Kainardji.

§ 77. Such is an outline of the political vicissitudes through which the two Danubian Principalities have passed, prior to the Treaty of Kutschuk-Kainardji⁹, (10 July, 1774). By this treaty, the Empress Catharine of Russia agreed to restore to the Porte the province of Bessarabia, and the Principalities of Moldavia and Walachia, which the Russian armies had overrun. The stipulations in favour of the Principalities were peculiar. It was provided that the inhabitants should have the free exercise of the Christian Religion, and that the Prince of each Principality should be allowed to maintain a Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople, to superintend the affairs of each

⁷ Moldavia was ruled successively by Yankoul a Saxon, (anno 1580,) Gratiani, a Croat, (anno 1618,) Bernawski, a Pole, (anno 1626,) and Alexander Elias, a

Greek, (anno 1620—1631.)

⁸ Schmauss, Corp. Jur. p. 1133.

⁹ Martens, Recueil, II. p. 286.

Principality, and who should be entitled to the privileges of an Envoy under the Law of Nations. The Porte also consented that the Russian Ambassador at Constantinople might advocate the cause of the Principalities, if circumstances required it; and promised to listen to him with respect and favour. An explanatory Convention was subsequently signed at Constantinople (10 March, 1779¹⁰), in which the right of the Porte to levy tribute from the Principalities was submitted to certain regulations. By the next following Treaty of Bucharest, (28 May, 1812¹¹), the Ottoman Porte ceded to Russia those portions of Moldavia which lay on the left bank of the Pruth; which river was to be henceforth the boundary of the Ottoman and Russian Empires. The subsequent Treaty of Adrianople (14 Sept. 1829) made an important change in the International Status of the Principalities. The Fifth Article, which referred to Moldavia and Walachia, as being under the Suzerainty of the Porte and the Guaranty of Russia, stipulated that they should enjoy an Independent National administration, and full liberty of commercial intercourse, with special reference to certain provisions contained in a separate Act annexed to the Treaty. Under this Act it was provided that the office of Hospodar should be an office for life; subject in other respects to the regulation of the separate Act of the Convention of Ackerman¹² (7 Oct. 1826). By the latter Act, which purported to explain the Treaty of Bucharest, it had been provided that the Hospodars should not be dismissed from their office by the Porte, without the permission of Russia; and Convention of Constantinople, 10 March, 1779.

Treaty of Bucharest, 28 May, 1812.

Treaty of Adrianople, 14 Sept. 1829.

Convention of Ackerman.

¹⁰ Martens, Recueil, II. p. 653.

¹¹ Martens, Nouveau Recueil, III. p. 397.

¹² Martens, N. R. VIII. p. 143.

the Russian Consuls were empowered concurrently with the officers of the Porte to remonstrate with the Hospodars, if they should infringe in any manner the privileges of the Country in regard to taxes and other imposts. The Porte further undertook by the Treaty of Adrianople, (14 Sept. 1829,) that no Musulman should set foot in the Principalities except for temporary purposes of commerce¹³. The Internal administration of the two Principalities was to be perfectly Independent, and their Governments were authorised to raise a native militia for the purpose of enforcing the Quarantine regulations, protecting the frontiers, maintaining peace and order, and executing the laws. By a subsequent Treaty signed at St. Petersburg, (29 Jan. 1834,) and kept secret for some time¹⁴, it was agreed that the Hospodars should for that turn be nominated according to an agreement between Russia and the Porte ; and it was further stipulated that the Porte should give regimental colours to the native militia which kept garrison in the Interior of the two Provinces ; and a flag for the Walacho-Moldavian merchant vessels navigating the Danube. The last Convention which it is necessary to notice is that of Balta Liman¹⁵, (1 May, 1849,) under which Russia and the Porte by common consent suspended the existing political Constitution of the Principalities, as established by the Organic Statute of 1831, and made arrangements for a Commission of Boyards to submit a new political Constitution for the mutual

Treaty of St. Petersburg, 29
Jan. 1834.

Convention of Balta Li-man, 1 May, 1849.

¹³ Martens, N. R. VI. p. 1053.

¹⁴ This circumstance may account for this treaty not being found in any general collection of treaties. It occurs amongst the Treaties (Political and Territorial) between Russia and Turkey, (1774—1849,) presented to both Houses of Parliament by command of her Majesty, 1854.

¹⁵ Martens, N. R. Général, XIV. p. 378.

approval of the two Courts. Meanwhile Russian and Ottoman troops were to occupy the Principalities, and the two Courts were to have each an extraordinary Commissioner resident in the Principalities. These Commissioners were to offer their advice and counsel in common to the Hospodars, and were to agree together in selecting the Commission of Boyards to revise the Constitution. It was further provided that all the previous treaties confirmed by the separate Act of the Treaty of Adrianople should retain their full force and effect.

§ 78. It is difficult in examining the Convention of Balta Liman to appreciate the political relations under which the two contracting Powers respectively claimed to deal with the Internal affairs of the Principalities. It is recited in the preamble, that they act in a spirit of fidelity to their antecedent engagements, which secure to the Principalities the privileges of a distinct administration and certain other local immunities; and that it has become necessary to adopt by common agreement extraordinary and effectual measures for the protection of those immunities and privileges, which the Principalities ought to enjoy, in virtue of solemn treaties concluded between Russia and the Sublime Porte. It would thus seem that the right of joint action on the part of the Two Powers was held to rest on antecedent Treaty-engagements, under which they were called upon to exercise a joint Protectorate over the Principalities. The Sixth Article reserved to the two Courts the right at the expiration of seven years to take into consideration the then existing State of the Principalities, and to determine upon the ulterior measures which they might judge most suitable, to ensure their well-being and tranquillity. No allusion was made throughout this Convention to the Sovereignty of the Sublime Porte, and the two Imperial Courts were to have in substance an equal voice in directing the political action of both Principalities. The establishment of a Russian Resident in each Principality by the side of an Ottoman Resident, with a right of political action within a certain sphere, as distinguished from the commercial agency of a Consul, was ostensibly a step in the direction of recognising the Independence of the Principalities. On the other hand, as each Resident was entitled under the treaty to advise and counsel the Hospodars, each Power possessed an indirect right to control the Internal administration of the Principalities. The right of the Sultan indeed rested upon ancient Capitulations with the Principalities themselves, whereas the right of the Emperor of Russia rested upon Conventions with the Sultan; who may be thus taken to have bound himself by treaty to share with Russia the active duties of the Suzerainty, which he exercised under the Capitulations.

Treaty of
Paris.

§ 79. Such was the peculiar Status of the Danubian Principalities before the Treaty of Paris of 1856. Their political relations were certainly ambiguous, but there is no difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that they were not Members of the Family of Nations. They had not the right of Legation under the Law of Nations, for the reception of their Resident Chargés d'Affaires at Constantinople was exceptional, and their functions were regulated by a special convention between the Porte and Russia; they had not the right of Alliance, as all public treaties respecting the Principalities were concluded between their Suzerain and Foreign Powers. The Consuls maintained by Foreign Powers at Bucharest and Galatz were accredited to and received their Exequatur from the Sublime Porte, and no political or commercial agents on behalf of the Hospodars had ever been received by Foreign Courts. The conditions of the Principalities in all these respects were not in any way changed by the Treaty of Paris¹⁶ (30 March, 1856). By Article XXII, the Principalities of Walachia and Moldavia were to continue to enjoy under the Suzerainty of the Porte and the Guaranty of the Contracting Powers the privileges and immunities of which they were in possession. No exclusive Protection was to be exercised over them by any of the Guaranteeing Powers, nor was any Power to have any special right to interfere in their internal affairs. By Article XXIII, the Sublime Porte engaged itself to secure the Principalities an Independent and National administration, as well as perfect liberty of worship, legislation, commerce, and navigation; and after the opinion of the Representatives had been taken as to the definitive organization of the two provinces, the Porte undertook to confirm that organization by a Hatti-Cherif, and the Provinces were henceforth to remain under the collective guaranty of all the Contracting Powers. The Principalities were to have a National army to maintain public order and to protect their frontiers, and no armed intervention could take place without a previous agreement amongst the Powers who had signed the Treaty of Paris.

§ 80. The organization of the two Danubian Principalities has undergone a fundamental change since the Treaty of Paris of 1856. By a Convention of 19 August, 1858, between the two Principalities, a Central Commission was established, charged with maintaining an uniformity of legislation in matters of common interest. In 1859 the Assemblies of the two Principalities concurred in electing Prince Alexander Couza as Hospodar of the two Principalities, and the Porte, by a Firman of 4 Dec. 1861, in concert with the guaranteeing Powers, established an union of the two Governments and of the two Assemblies, which was to terminate however with the government of Prince Couza. Finally the Porte, with the concurrence of the guaranteeing Powers, recognised in 1864 the rights of the Principalities to modify their internal administration, saving always the rights of the Suzerain Power. The immediate result of this concession on the part of the Suzerain Power was that the two Principalities united themselves into one State under the title of Roumania in 1865. Prince Couza having abdicated the Princely Throne of Roumania¹⁷ shortly after that event, the Powers who were parties to the Treaty of Paris of 1856, assembled in Conference at Paris on 10 March, 1866, in order to examine the questions which the vacancy in the Hospodariate had given rise to; and whilst the Powers were still in Conference, the Roumanian people by a plebiscite elected Prince Charles Louis of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen to be Prince of the United Principalities under the name of Charles I. The European Powers after some hesitation recognised the election of Prince Charles, and the Porte granted him its investiture on 23 Oct. 1866. In the following year a rupture of friendly relations took place between the Porte and Roumania, and from 3 June, 1867, the Principality declared itself to be independent of the Porte. It followed the fortunes of Russia in the ensuing war, and its independence was recognised

¹⁶ Martens, N. R. Général, Tom. XV. p. 770.

Moldavia and Walachia united under the title of Roumania.

Roumania constituted
a kingdom.

¹⁷ On 23 Feb., 1866, Recueil par le Baron de Testa. Tom. V. des Traités de la Porte Ottomane, p. 514.

by the Porte under Article V of the Peace of San Stefano (3 March, 1878). The European Powers subsequently recognised the Independence of Roumania under Article XLIII of the Treaty of Berlin (13 July, 1878), subject to the same conditions of religious liberty and civil equality as were stipulated in the case of Servia. Prince Charles has since that Treaty assumed the title of King of Roumania, in accordance with the unanimous vote of the people of the United Principalities, on 26 March, 1881, and his title of King has been recognised by the European Powers. He was crowned on 22 May, 1881.

Roumania
constituted
a kingdom.

A somewhat important change was made under Article XLV of the Treaty of Berlin (1878) in the territorial arrangements sanctioned by the Treaty of Paris (1856). The Principality of Roumania ceded back to Russia the portion of the territory of Bessarabia, which had been detached from Russia under the Treaty of Paris, 1856, limited to the West by the mid-channel of the River Pruth, and to the South by the mid-channel of the Kilia branch of the Danube, and the embouchure of Stary-Stamboul. Under the preliminaries of the Peace of San Stefano Turkey had agreed to cede to Russia the Sandjak of Toultscha on the South side of the Danube, including the Cazas of Kilia, Soulina, Mahmoudié, Isaktcha, Toultscha, Matchin, Babadagh, Hirsovo, Kustendje, and Mehjidié, together with the Isles of the Delta of the Danube and the Island of Serpents. Russia reserved to herself the right of exchanging the territory above specified for the portion of Bessarabia detached from Russia under the Treaty of Paris of 1856, and limited on the South by the Thalweg of the Kilia branch of the Danube and the embouchure of Stary-Stamboul. This exchange on Retrocession to Russia of a portion of Bessarabia.

the part of Russia was approved by the Powers in Article XLVI of the Treaty of Berlin, 1878, and in addition there was assigned to Roumania the territory South of the Dobroutcha, bounded by a line drawn Eastwards from Silistria to the Black Sea, at a point South of Mangalia¹⁸. Further allusion will be made to this arrangement in a subsequent chapter on the navigation of Great Rivers.

The Principality of Montenegro.

§ 81. Montenegro, or Tzernegóra, as it is styled in the language of the native people, is a small State, which formed in 1856 an integral part of the Ottoman Empire. It is called by the Ottomans Karadagh, which has the same meaning as Tzernegóra, namely, the Black Mountain; the name of the people in their own language is Tzernegórkí. Montenegro was considered by the Ottomans to be a department of the Pachalik of Scutari. It was originally a district of Servia, when that Country was ruled by its own Kings, and it was governed by a Prince dependent on the Servian Monarch. After the Conquest of Servia by the Ottomans (anno 1389), the Princes of the Family of Tzeruoievich maintained for a considerable time their Independence, but the Ottoman Armies having overrun Albania and obtained possession of Herzegovina, George Tzeruoievich with the consent of the people transferred the Government of Montenegro into the hands of the Bishop, and withdrew to Venice (anno 1516). Since that period the Spiritual and the Temporal Powers were vested in a Prince Bishop, who was entitled the Vladika, which signifies Prince or Ruler. This Office, although de jure elective, has been in practice hereditary in the Family of Petrovich since the close of the Seventeenth Century, but as

The Vladika, or Prince
Bishop.

¹⁸ Samwer and Hopf., *Traité*s, 2^{me} Série. Tom. III. p. 253. Ibid. p. 463.

every Vladika is consecrated Bishop and cannot marry, the succession has always passed to a nephew, or such other member of the family as might happen to be the next heir. The Ottomans during the Sixteenth Century made frequent inroads into the Country, but failed to establish themselves in it, and it was not until A.D. 1623 that Soleiman, Pacha of Scutari, succeeded in penetrating to Tzetenie, the Capital, when the Supremacy of the Sublime Porte was in name established over the Black Mountain. The Ottomans, however, have never been able to remain in possession of the Country, and the Montenegrins have been always ready to co-operate with the Venetians, or with the Austrians, in their wars against the Porte. By the Treaty of Carlovitz¹⁹ (anno 1699) Treaty of Carlovitz. Montenegro appears to have been left by the Ottomans under the Protectorate of Venice. By the Treaty of Passarovitz (anno 1718)²⁰ it was in terms Treaty of Passarovitz. ceded back by Venice, and became again subject to the Porte, and its dependence on the Porte was recognised by Austria in the Treaty of Sistova²¹ (anno 1791), when the latter Power stipulated that the Treaty of Sistova. Montenegrins should not be molested or punished by the Porte for having declared against their proper Sovereign. Relations of a very singular kind were established in 1706 between the Montenegrins and the Emperor Peter the Great of Russia. The Montenegrins placed themselves formally under the Protection of Russia and took the oath of allegiance to the Czar, since which period it has been usual for the successor of each Vladika to receive consecration at St. Petersburg, and his consecration as Bishop has been a virtual investiture of his office as Vladika. It ¹⁹ Schmauss, Corp. Jur. p. 1133.²⁰ Id. p. 1740.²¹ Marens, Recueil, Tom. V. p. 244.

The Prince of Montenegro no longer
Bishop.

is stated by some writers that the Vladika, who succeeded in 1830, refused the Episcopal dignity and was a lay Chief. The more correct account is as follows:—On the death of Pietro I. on the 30th Oct., 1830, his nephew whom he had recommended as his successor, being only fifteen years of age, was admitted into Holy Orders, but being too young to take the reins of Government, or to receive the Episcopal dignity, a locum tenens was appointed, and Sr. Ivanovich was sent from St. Petersburg to govern the Country, until the consecration of the new Vladika. This took place at St. Petersburg on 18th August, 1833²³, after which the youthful Vladika returned to his own Country and carried on the Government until his death in 1851, when he was succeeded by Daniel I, who perished by the hand of an assassin in 1860. It was the late Prince Daniel I, whose early education was carried on at Vienna and not at St. Petersburg, who once more separated the secular functions of the office of Prince from the spiritual functions of the office of Bishop. His Code of Laws²⁴ promulgated at Tzetenie, 23 April, 1855, purports to be issued under the hand of Daniel Prince of Montenegro and Prince of Berda, the latter title being taken from the Eastern division of the Country.

Since the Peace of 1815 the Montenegrins have been constantly at war with the Ottoman Porte, and the latter Power has made the most determined efforts to reduce them to submission both in 1839 and in 1852. On the latter occasion Russia and Austria employed ²³ Wilkinson's Dalmatia and Montenegro, I. p. 464.

²⁴ A German translation of this Code has been published at Vienna under title of Gesetzbuch

Danieli I. Fürsten und Gebieters von Montenegro und der Berda. Wien, 1859. Verlag von Friederich Manz.

their good offices on behalf of the Montenegrins, whilst France and Great Britain counselled the Porte to respect the de facto Independence of Montenegro, without abandoning its de jure Title over the Country. The Montenegrins, however, failed to obtain any improvement of their international Status through the good offices of the Christian Powers who took part in the Congress of Paris (1856), when the Ottoman Plenipotentiaries took occasion to declare that "the Sublime Porte considers Montenegro to be an integral part of the Ottoman Empire, but that it has no intention to alter the actual state of things in that Country²⁵." During the interval which elapsed between the Peace of Paris of 1856 and the Treaty of San Stefano, the relations between the Prince of Montenegro and the Ottoman Porte have been repeatedly troubled, but the Porte always succeeded in maintaining its Sovereignty over the Principality until Montenegro declared war overtly against Turkey on 2 July, 1876, from sympathy with the insurrection in Herzegovina. In the correspondence²⁶ which ensued between Austria-Hungary and the Porte, in consequence of the former Power objecting to the Porte's use of the harbour of Klek for belligerent purposes, Austria-Hungary intimated her opinion, that as the Prince of Montenegro neither received investiture from the Porte nor paid tribute to the Porte, he was to be considered de facto independent of the Porte (30 July, 1876). The Christian Powers who had been parties to the Treaty of Paris, 1856, felt themselves called upon in the course of the following autumn to attempt to mediate between the Porte

Congress of Paris
of 1856.

²⁵ Protocols of Conferences 25 and 26 March, 1856. Martens, N. R. Général, XV. p. 736, 738. ²⁶ Recueil Général des Traités, par Samwer et Hopf. 2^{me} Série. Tom. III. p. 26.

and the Principality, and they endeavoured in a series of Conferences held at Constantinople (11-22 Dec., 1876), to reestablish relations of peace between them on the basis of the Status quo ante, subject to a certain rectification of the frontier of the Principality and to the concession to it on the part of the Porte of the free navigation of the River Bojana, so as to afford to the Principality access to the Sea, from which it had been hitherto debarred. Upon the failure of the Christian Powers to come to a satisfactory understanding with the Porte as to the amelioration of the condition of its Christian subjects generally in Bosnia, Herzegovina, and Bulgaria war was declared by Russia against the Porte on 24 April, 1877, and the result was that the Porte was compelled by a series of reverses to agree to the conditions of the Treaty of San Stefano of 3 March, 1878²⁷. Under Article II of this treaty the Sublime Porte recognised definitively the independence of the Principality of Montenegro. A more general recognition of its Independence on the part of the European Powers was subsequently placed on record in Article XXVI of the Treaty of Berlin of 13 July, 1878²⁸, and perfect liberty of religious worship was at the same time assured to all the inhabitants of the Principality. It was further provided in Article XXIX, by which Antivari and its coast was annexed to Montenegro, that the port of Antivari and all the waters of Montenegro should be closed against the war-vessels of all nations. Montenegro was also forbidden to have a war-flag or to keep any vessels of war. Austria-Hungary undertook meanwhile that her light-guardships should maintain the police of the Montenegrin Coast.

²⁷ Nouveau Recueil Général, par Martens et Samwer. 2^{me} Série. Tom. III. p. 246.

²⁸ Ibid. p. 449.

CHAPTER VI.

SOURCES OF THE LAW OF NATIONS.

Natural and Positive Law—Natural Law of Nations—Positive or Voluntary Law of Nations—Vattel's Subdivision of Positive Law—Customary and Conventional Law—Identity of the Law of Nations with the Law of Nature, according to Hobbes and Puffendorf—The Law of Nations a Special Science, according to De Wolff and Vattel—Essential Difference between Nations and Individual Human Beings—The Law of Nature—Identical Natural Law of Rude and Civilised Nations—Growth of the Positive Law of Nations—Study of the Law of Nations in England—Courts of the Law of Nations—Customary or Consuetudinary Law of Nations—Customary Relations with Non-Christian Powers Exceptional—The Primary Principles of European Public Law applied to Mahomedan States—The Diplomatic Science—Conventional Law of Nations—Views of Martens and others contrasted with those of Schmalz and others—Ortolan's View of the Effect of Conventions on General Law—Wheaton's Earlier and Later Views—Illustration as to Contraband of War—Declaration of Maritime Law at Paris, 16 April, 1856—Preambles and Recitals of a Declaratory Character—Objections to the Idea of any Law, as such, between Nations—International Morality distinct from the Law of Nations.

§ 82. THE proper and immediate subjects of the ^{Natural and Positive Law.} Law of Nations being those political communities which are in a state of Independence, and the test of their Independence being their aptitude or capacity to discharge the obligations of Natural Society towards other political communities and to regulate the mode of discharging those obligations without the consent of any Political Superior, the rules which result from their mutual relations, and which govern their intercourse, resolve themselves into Natural rules and Positive rules, and the aggregate body of those rules, which admit of being enforced, constitute the Law of Nations in the most extensive sense of the term. The Law of Nations accordingly divides itself into Natural or Necessary Law, and Positive or Instituted Law¹.

Natural
Law of
Nations.

§ 83. The Natural Law of Nations is founded on the Nature of Independent States, as such, and is the result of the relations observed to exist in Nature between Nations as Independent Communities². The Positive Law of Nations, on the other hand, is based on the consent of Nations, and is the result of the relations instituted between them by their own free will. The sanction of the Natural Law of Nations is found in the fact that its violation terminates the existence of an Independent State, as such. The sanction of the Positive Law of Nations is found in the isolation of the State which disregards it. The obligation of the former is involuntary, whereas the obligation of the latter is consensual³, and the consent of Nations to it is either substantially evidenced by

¹ Natural Law, according to Puffendorf, is that which is so exactly fitted to suit with the rational and social nature of man, that human kind cannot maintain an honest and peaceful Fellowship without it. Positive Law, on the other hand, he writes, is sometimes called by the name of Voluntary, because no positive law has such an agreeableness with Human Nature as to be necessary in general for the preservation of mankind, or as to be known or discovered without the help of express and peculiar promulgation. Law of Nature and of Nations, B. I. c. 4. § 18.

² Esse autem aliquid juris naturalis probari solet ab eo quod prius est, tum ab eo quod posterius, quarum probandi rationum illa subtilior est, hæc popularior.

A priori, si ostendatur rei alicujus convenientia aut disconvenientia necessaria cum natura rationali et sociali. A posteriori vero, si non certissima fide, certe probabiliter admodum, juris naturalis colligitur id, quod apud omnes gentes, aut moratiores omnes tale esse creditur. Nam universalis effectus universalem requirit causam; talis autem existimationis causa vix ulla videtur esse posse præter sensum ipsum, communis qui dicitur. Grotius de Jure Belli et Pacis, L. I. c. 1. § 12.

³ Pacto obligamur; lege obligati tenemur. Pactum obligat per se; lex obligatum tenet virtute pacti universalis de præstanda obedientia. Hobbes, De Civ. Imperium, c. 14. § 2.

their unvarying practice, or has been formally recorded in some Public Act or Convention.

§ 84. Grotius in constructing his system of Public Law had perceived that certain rules of International Life, which were universally observed, could not be fairly deduced from any admitted principles of Natural Right. He concluded accordingly that they had been introduced by the Consent of Nations, and rested upon Custom and tacit Compact (*moribus et pacto tacito introductum*⁴). It was this entire Body of Law which Grotius comprised under the head of Jus Gentium Voluntarium or *Jus Constitutum*⁵. De Wolff, on the other hand, distinguished the Jus Voluntarium from the Jus Pactitium and Jus Consuetudinarium, and whilst Grotius considered the Voluntary Law of Nations to be based upon the general consent of Nations as evidenced by their practice, De Wolff regarded it as a body of rules deduced from the nature of the Social Union amongst Nations, and from the operation of which no civilised Nation can withdraw itself. De Wolff accordingly held the Voluntary Law of Nations to be universally binding upon civilised Nations, whilst the obligation of the Customary Law of Nations was limited to those Nations, amongst whom it had been established by long usage.

De Wolff in establishing the foundations of that species of the Law of Nations, which he termed Vo-

Positive or Voluntary Law of
Nations.

⁴ Sed sicut cujusque civitatis jura utilitatem suæ civitatis respiciunt, ita inter civitates aut omnes aut plerasque ex consensu jura quædam nasci potuerunt, et nata apparent, quæ utilitatem respicerent non cætuum singulorum, sed magnæ illius universitatis. De Jure Belli et Pacis, Proleg. § 17.

⁵ Grotius divided Voluntary, as distinguished from Natural Law, into law directly instituted by God and law instituted by Man, but he considered the instituted Law of God, as far as Nations are regarded, to be confined to the Jewish Nation. De Jure Belli et Pacis, L. I. c. 1. § 15, 16.

luntary, had assumed the existence of a Great Commonwealth (Civitas Maxima)* of which all civilised nations were members. The Jus Gentium Voluntarium accordingly occupied a place in the Great Commonwealth analogous to that which the Jus Civile holds in Individual States.

Vattel, however, has not followed De Wolff in his fiction of a Great Commonwealth of Nations; he holds that fiction to be neither very just nor very solid, but he has retained the division of Voluntary Law as distinct from Customary and Conventional Law. Vattel however does not agree with De Wolff in the grounds upon which the latter rests the obligation of Voluntary Law; on the contrary, he regards it as a branch of Positive Law derived from the presumed consent of Nations, whilst he rests the Conventional Law upon their express consent, and the Customary Law upon their tacit consent. As there can be no other mode of deducing any law from the will of Nations, there are only, he says, these three Species of Positive Law.

Subdivision of Positive Law.

§ 85. This threefold subdivision of the Positive Law of Nations, which Vattel has popularised, is objectionable in principle, and it is at the same time practically inconvenient. It is objectionable in principle, as it involves what Logicians term a cross-division, for Conventional and Customary Law are evidently subordinate branches of Voluntary Law, and it will tend rather to confuse than to elucidate the subject, if we should class them by the side of Voluntary Law as coordinate Species of one and the same Genus. In the second place, the threefold subdivision is practically inconvenient, for certain rules of international

* Civitas, in quam Gentes covisse intelliguntur, et cujus ipse sunt membra, sive cives, vocatur

Civitas Maxima. Jus Gentium, § 10.

intercourse which Vattel, following the authority of De Wolff, ranks under the head of Voluntary as distinguished from Conventional and Customary Law, would seem rather to partake of the character of Natural Law, as they are derived from the natural relations of independent political societies. For instance, in discussing the foundation of Voluntary Law Vattel says¹, "It is therefore necessary on many occasions that Nations should suffer certain things to be done, though in their own nature unjust and condemnable, because they cannot oppose them by open force without violating the liberty of some particular States, and destroying the foundation of their natural society. And since they are bound to cultivate that Society, it is de jure presumed, that all Nations have consented to the principle which we have just established. The rules which are deducible from it constitute what De Wolff calls the Voluntary Law of Nations." It is obvious, however, that Nations are under a natural obligation to refrain from all acts which tend to destroy their Natural Society. A scrupulous respect for the independence of Individual States, evidenced by a systematic abstinence from all encroachments upon that independence, is a necessary condition of Permanent Fellowship amongst Nations. Non-interference to such an extent would thus seem to be a natural law of international life, and it is superfluous to presume a consent of Nations as an authority for the rule of such Non-interference. On the contrary, we should rather weaken the sanctions of such a rule, if we were to class it under the head of Voluntary as opposed to Necessary Law, and were to suppose it to rest upon the will of Nations rather than to be essential to their Fellowship. Voluntary Law, as a matter of fact, ends where the Independence of Nations becomes imperilled, and it is not an optional matter to respect the liberty of individual Nations, when a disregard for that liberty would entail the dissolution of international Society.

¹ Droit des Gens, Préliminaires, § 21.

Customary
and Conventional
Law.

§ 86. The identification of the Voluntary Law of Nations with the entire body of Instituted or Positive Law, and the employment of the term Voluntary Law to designate a Genus, of which Conventional and Customary Law are the Species, has been approved by the more distinguished American Jurists. Mr. Wheaton^{*} observes, that it is almost superfluous to point out the confusion in Vattel's enumeration of the different species of International Law, which might easily have been avoided by reserving the expression Voluntary Law of Nations to designate the Genus, including all the rules introduced by positive consent for the regulation of international conduct, and divided into the two species of Conventional and Customary Law. To the same effect Mr. Justice Story has observed, "By the Law of Nations we understand not merely that portion of Public Law which is generally recognised amongst Nations, (as seems to have been the prevailing use of the phrase in the Roman Code,) but that portion of the Public Law which regulates the intercourse, adjusts the rights, and forms the basis of the Commercial and Political Relations of States with each other. Perhaps the most appropriate name would be International Law, Jus inter Gentes. It has in this view been correctly subdivided into three sorts, first, the Natural or Necessary Law of Nations, in which the principles of Natural Justice are applied to the intercourse between States; secondly, the Customary Law of Nations, which embodies those usages which the continued habit of Nations has sanctioned for their mutual interest and convenience; and thirdly, the Conventional or Diplomatic Law of Nations, which embraces positive compacts by treaties and conventions between Nations, and derives its sole obligation from the same sources as other contracts. Under this last head many regulations will now be found which had first resulted from custom or a general sense of justice, and are now made of positive obligation for the purpose of preventing National disputes and collisions⁹."

^{*} Elements of International Law, c. 1. § 9.

§ 87. The Natural Law of Nations is capable of being distinguished from the Law of Nature, which governs the mutual relations and the intercourse of individual human beings. Hobbes¹⁰ and Puffendorf¹¹ have maintained the identity of the rules, which result from the natural relations of States, with those which result from the natural relations of individual men, considering Nations to be aggregate bodies of human beings, having in the mass rights and obligations, which differ only in degree from those which the individuals have in their several capacities. According to this view there is no distinct Science of the Law of Nations. But these writers in maintaining that Natural Law, such as it is in reference to individual human beings, is identical with the Natural Law which governs the intercourse of Nations, have not discriminated sufficiently between Law and the Principles of Right which are embodied in Law. The Principles of Right (Droit) are beyond doubt invariable, but the mode in which those principles are of the Law of Nations with the Law of Nature, according to Hobbes

Identity
and Puffendorf.

⁹ Story's Miscellaneous Writings, p. 536. "On the value and importance of Legal Studies."

¹⁰ Hobbes, De Civ. Imperium,

c. 14. § 4.

¹¹ Puffendorf, Law of Nature and of Nations, L. III. c. 3.

§ 23.

applied and developed undergoes infinite variations in accordance with the varying nature of the subjects to which they must be adapted. Law is, in fact, not an abstract principle of Duty or Right, but a System of applied principles.

The Law
of Nations
a special science according to De Wolff
and Vattel.

§ 88. Barbeyrac, the translator and commentator both of Grotius and of Puffendorf, in combating the notion of a Positive Law of Nations, which he treats as "a chimæra," and in contending that the principles and rules of the Law of Nations are the same as those of the Law of Nature, is constrained to admit that there is a difference with respect to the mode in which those principles are applied in the two Laws¹². De Wolff developed this doctrine more fully, perceiving that Nations were Composite Bodies, having in their collective capacities a Moral Being of their own, which in its nature and essence differed in many respects from the Moral Being of the individuals which composed the Nation¹³. Vattel followed in the direct track of De Wolff: "A State," he writes, "is a subject very different from an individual of the human race, from which circumstance, pursuant to the Law of Nature itself, there result in many cases very different obligations and rights, since the same general rules applied to two subjects cannot produce exactly the same decisions when the subjects are different, and a particular rule, which is perfectly just with respect to one subject, is not applicable to another subject of quite a different nature. There are many cases, therefore, in which the Law of Nature does not decide between State and State, as it would between Man

¹² Note on Grotius, De Jure Belli et Pacis, L. I. c. 1. § 14.

¹³ Jus Gentium, Prolegomena § 3. Alia enim sunt principia Juris Naturæ, alia vero est ap-plicatio eorundem ad Gentes, quæ diversitatem quandam parit in eo, quod infertur, quatenus natura Gentis non est eadem cum natura humana.

and Man. We must therefore know how to accommodate the application of it to different objects, and it is the art of thus applying it with a precision founded on right reason, which renders the Law of Nations a distinct and special Science¹⁴.

§ 89. A Nation is essentially an Independent Political Society, whereas an individual human being is a Dependent Member of a Political Society. It is obvious therefore, that certain principles which may be applied absolutely to the intercourse of Nations by reason of their mutual independence, can only be applied sub modo to the intercourse of individual citizens; for instance, the principle of self-preservation is applicable to the mutual relations both of Nations and of individual human beings, but its application results in very different rules in the one case and in the other. Thus a Nation may freely confederate with other Nations against a common neighbour, but the principle of self-preservation may not be carried out in the same absolute manner by the individual members of a Political Society. What would be a perfectly lawful League in the case of Nations, might be an unlawful combination amongst individual citizens. Again, the principle of sum cuique is applicable in the most absolute manner to Nations, but its application to the individual members of a Political Society is modified by a variety of considerations arising out of the relations which have been established between the individuals and the Society of which they are members, and is conditional upon its adaptation to those relations.

§ 90. Man is sometimes spoken of as living in a state of Nature when he is living under the rudest forms of physical life, and the law of his existence under such forms is by certain writers laid down to be the Law of Nature applicable to human beings. Such a view of the Law of Nature would indeed harmonize in substance with the Jus Naturale of Ulpian, who defines it to be that Law which Nature teaches all animals¹⁶. In a still looser sense men speak of the Law of Nature in regard to inanimate things. Thus it is said to be the Law of Nature that vegetables grow with their roots downwards and their stalks upwards, or to use the more accurate language of art, "that a seed in vegetating directs its radicle downwards and its plumule upwards." It is likewise said to be the Law of Nature that matter lighter than water floats upon its surface, as well as that water rises to the level from which it flows. But when men speak of the Law of Nature in this sense, they only mean to denote an universal fact, and the conformity of individual cases to the general rule is that which is said to constitute the Law of Nature. (Thus the Jus Naturale of the Roman Jurists represents little more than a general fact traceable to the instinct of physical life, and the illustration which is given, e.g. *conjunctio maris et fœminæ*¹⁷, is applicable to the vegetable as well as to the animal world.

Essential difference between Nations and Individual human beings.

The Law of Nature.

¹⁴ Droit des Gens, Préliminaires, § 6.

Identical Natural Law of Rude and Civilised
Nations.

§ 91. The Law of Nature, in the sense in which Writers on International Jurisprudence apply the term, corresponds in the main not with the Jus Naturale of the Roman Jurist, but with that division of law which is described in the Institutes¹⁸, as "the law which Natural Reason teaches all mankind." Whether we regard man in a rude state of what is ¹⁶ Jus Naturale, quod natura omnia animalia docuit. Inst. L. I. Tit. 11.

¹⁷ Quod Naturalis Ratio inter omnes homines constituit, id apud omnes peræque custoditur, vocaturque Jus Gentium, quasi quo jure omnes gentes utuntur. Inst. L. I. Tit. 11.

¹⁸ Just. Inst. L. I. Tit. 10.

termed savage life, or in a refined state of what is called civilised society, the one condition being equally natural with the other, the law which Reason suggests to him in either case will be equally the Law of Nature. It is accordingly not necessary to adopt a distinction which has been introduced by certain writers upon the authority of Von Ompteda¹⁹ between the Absolute Natural Law and the Modified Natural Law.

Mr. Reddie²⁰ in commenting upon this subdivision of Natural Law, has happily observed, that the International Law of civilised Nations is as natural, and results as much from the legal relations actually existing in nature amongst those Nations as the International Law of rude Nations, and that as Von Ompteda rests his Modified Natural Law of States upon the general conviction of civilised Nations, there is really no ground for propounding it as a separate species of International Law distinct from what is viewed as the Primary Natural and Necessary Law of Nations.

§ 92. It was not until the Peace of Westphalia that sufficient materials were forthcoming for reducing into a system the Positive or Instituted Law of Nations. The principal writers during the Seventeenth Century had treated almost exclusively of the Natural Law of Nations, and the followers of Puffendorf, who expounded the Law of Nations entirely from the Law of Nature, were at the end of that Century the predominant school on the Continent of Europe. The contemporaneous English School of International Jurists was, on the contrary, always of a practical character. This was partly attributable to those common causes, whatever they may be, which

Growth
of the Positive Law
of Nations.

¹⁹ Litt. des Völkerrechts, 1758. ²⁰ Inq. in Internat. Law, p. 127.

give a peculiar practical turn to the course of English thought on all subjects, but it was partly due to the existence of a special jurisdiction in England which took cognizance of questions touching the Jus inter Gentes. It has been well observed by Mr. Chancellor Kent²¹, in reviewing the growth of the existing system of International Law, that "many of the most important principles of public law have been brought into use and received a practical application, and been reduced to legal precision since the age of Grotius and of Puffendorf, and we must resort to the judicial decisions of the Prize Tribunals of Europe and in this country (the United States of North America) for information and authority on a great many points on which all the leading Text-Writers have preserved a total silence." From the Thirteenth to the Sixteenth Century, the controversies of Nations had been adjudged by the rules of the Civil Law, and Albericus Gentilis, the earliest Jurist who rendered any essential service to International Law as a Science, in his Treatise de Jure Belli, which appeared in England towards the close of the Sixteenth Century, supports his positions of law by reference to the Civil Law of the Romans, and appeals to the authority of the Commentators on that Law. Grotius himself has recourse to the rules and distinctions of the Roman Law, sometimes as illustrating the application of the principles of Natural Justice, at other times as supplying the best evidence of the usage of mankind, or at least of that which he conceived to be the most civilised portion of it. For instance, Grotius supported his position, that no Nation could acquire rights of property over the sea, so as to exclude others from fishing in it, by reference to the Roman Law, showing from the Digest and the Text-Writers, that there had always been a rule founded on common consent in restraint of the Law of Nature with regard to prior occupancy, whereby the open sea was precluded from so being entirely reduced into possession by any Nation, as to found in it absolute and exclusive rights of property. "Wherever this Law of Nations is in force and has not been repealed by common consent, the most inconsiderable part of the sea, nay, though it be almost enclosed by the shore, can never be the property of any particular people ²²."

²¹ Commentaries on American Law, Part I. § 71.

§ 93. The study of the Civil Law in England had always been fostered by the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, at a time when the Courts of Westminster undervalued and disparaged it, and a privileged career was preserved for the Civilians in the High Court of Admiralty, where a knowledge of the Unwritten Law of the civilised World was of necessity maintained to meet the exigencies of the cases which might come before it. The threefold division of the Law of Nations into Natural, Conventional, and Customary, was adopted as early as the middle of the Seventeenth Century by Dr. Richard Zouch, who was at that time Judge of the High Court of Admiralty, and at the same time Regius Professor of Civil Law at Oxford. His Treatise on Fœtal Law, or as he termed it, Jus inter Gentes ²³, which appeared within a quarter of a century after the great work of Grotius, although small in bulk, was in substance very complete. His words are precise, "Cum multi diversis temporibus idem affirmant, id ad causam universalem referri debet, quæ alia esse non potest, quam recta conclusio

Study of the Law of Nations in England.

²² De Jure Belli et Pacis, L. II. sive Juris inter Gentes, et questionum de eodem explicatio, c. 3. § 10. 3.

²³ Juris et Judicii Fœtialis, anno 1650.

ex Naturæ principiis proveniens, aut communis aliquis consensus, e quibus illa Jus Naturæ indicat, hic Jus Gentium. Deinde præter mores communes, pro Jure etiam inter Gentes habendum est, id quod Gentes singulæ cum singulis inter se consentiunt; utpote per pacta, conventiones, et fœdera, cum communis reipublicæ sponsio legem constituat, et populi universi, non minus quam singuli, suo consensu obligentur." Dr. Zouch was the first to adopt the expression Jus inter Gentes in preference to that of Jus Gentium. In later times the Chancellor d'Aguesseau has suggested the substitution of the term Droit entre Gens for Droit des Gens. Neither of these modifications in the terminology of the Science has taken root, and it was reserved for Mr. Bentham in more modern times to suggest the phrase "International Law²⁴," which bids fair to maintain itself in permanent use.

Courts of the Law of
Nations.

§ 94. It has been the peculiar duty of the Tribunals of the Law of Nations to investigate with precision the Jus Consuetudinarium, and to separate the fluctuating institutions of particular Nations from the established practice of mankind. "It is my duty," says one of the most distinguished administrators of the Law of Nations, (Lord Stowell,) "not to admit, because one Nation has thought fit to depart from the common usage of the world and to meet the notice of mankind in a new and unprecedented manner, that I am on that account under the necessity of acknowledging the efficacy of such a novel institution, merely be-

²⁴ Heffter considers the term "International Law" not to express the idea of the Jus Gentium of the Roman Jurisconsults. The former he considers to be identical with the external Public Law of States; the latter he holds to embrace the mutual relations of individuals, as well as of States, so far as concerns their respective rights and obligations, having everywhere the same character and effect, independently of all positive institutions, § 1.

cause general theory might give it a degree of countenance independent of all practice from the earliest history of mankind. The institution must conform to the Text-Law and likewise to the constant Usage of the matter, and when I am told that before the present war, no sentence of this kind has ever been produced in the annals of mankind, and that it is produced by one Nation only in this war, I require nothing more to satisfy me that it is the duty of this Court to reject such a sentence as inadmissible²⁵." The same accomplished Jurist has also noted on another occasion, how the practice of Nations controls the application of abstract principles. "It has been contended," he says, "that a sentence of condemnation passed before the tribunal of an ally upon a vessel lying in a neutral port is perfectly legal both on principle and authority. It is said, that on principle the security and condemnation of the capture are as complete in a neutral port, as in the port of the belligerent himself. On the mere principle of security it may perhaps be so, but it must be remembered that this is a matter not to be governed by abstract principles alone. The use and practice of Nations have intervened and shifted the matter from its foundation of that species. The expression which Grotius uses on these occasions, placuit gentibus, is in my opinion perfectly correct, intimating that there is an use and practice of Nations, to which we are now expected to conform²⁶."

§ 95. The Jus Consuetudinarium of Nations is to be gathered from a variety of sources. Ancient collections of Maritime Usages, such as are to be found in the Consolato del Mare and the Roles d'Oleron, supply

Customary
or Consue-tudinary
Law of
Nations.

²⁵ The Fladoyen, 1 Robinson's Reports, p. 141.

²⁶ The Henrich and Maria, 4 Robinson's Reports, p. 54.

evidence of a very early practice. Thus the Rule that enemy's goods found on board of neutral vessels may be captured and condemned as Prize of War is supported by a long established practice, of which evidence has been recorded in the Consolato del Mare, c. 231²⁷. On the other hand, a consuetudo may be inferred from a succession of Public Treaties, in which exceptions to it have been made for temporary purposes, or in which regulations have been agreed upon as to the manner of enforcing it. Thus there are numerous instances of Treaties since the middle of the Seventeenth Century, whereby Nations bound themselves to make exception towards one another in regard to the practice of confiscating the goods of an enemy found on board of the vessel of a friend. Such exceptions, however, were matters of Treaty-Engagement, and when the Treaty expired, the exceptional engagement ceased, and the general rule came into operation again. So likewise the consuetudo under which the Sound Dues were levied by Denmark upon all vessels passing into or out of the Baltic by the narrow seas of the Sound or the Belts, was matter of inference, as against the Nations of Europe, from a series of Treaties commencing in the Fourteenth Century, in which the European Powers have tacitly admitted the right of Denmark to levy tolls by negotiating for and agreeing to a tariff of the tolls. Again, a consuetudo may be directly recognised by the European Powers in a formal Convention, such for instance as the Convention of London 13 July, 1841, whereby the Five Principal Powers of Europe recognised the ancient Rule of the Ottoman Porte to keep the passage of the Straits of the Dardanelles closed against foreign vessels of war, whilst the Ottoman

²⁷ Black Book of the Admiralty. Rolls Edition, vol. iii. p. 539.

Porte is at peace, and declared their unanimous determination to conform themselves to it. Again, a consuetudo may be inferred from the Ordinances of Princes on matters touching their relations with other Powers, where an uniformity of principles is observed to pervade them, and their enactments in pari materia are identical.

§ 96. Savigny²⁸ has observed, that "there may exist between different Nations a common consciousness of Right similar to that which engenders the Positive Law of a particular Nation. The foundation of this community of feeling rests partly on a community of origin, partly on common religious convictions; and upon this Community of feeling has been built up a Positive Law of Nations, as it especially exists amongst the Christian States of Europe. But this Positive Law of Nations, in his opinion, is only imperfect Positive Law; partly, on account of its indeterminate character; partly, because it has not that solid basis which the Power of the Government and the authority of the tribunals give to the Positive Law of particular States. The progress of Civilisation, grounded on Christianity, has led the Nations of Europe to observe a rule analogous to this Positive Law of Nations in their dealings with Non-Christian Powers, from whom they do not always expect a similarity of conduct; but this extended application of the rule is of a purely moral character, and is not in the nature of Positive Law." The Consuetudinary Law of Christendom has been accordingly not invoked as the governing rule of intercourse between Christian and Mahommedan Powers with the same absoluteness as between Christian Powers. In matters however of substance, and with non-Christian Powers except-tional.

Relations

²⁸ System des heutigen Römischen Rechts, L. I. c. 11. § 11.

where a primary question of International Right is involved, the European Powers have enforced against the Ottoman Porte and her dependencies on the Barbary Coast, the same rule of conduct which has been accepted amongst Christian Nations. "On many accounts," says Lord Stowell, "they are undoubtedly not strictly considered on the same footing as European Merchants; they may on some points of the Law of Nations be entitled to a very relaxed application of the principles established between the States of Europe, holding an intimate and constant intercourse with one another. It is a Law made up of a good deal of complex reasoning, although derived from very simple rules, and altogether composing a pretty, artificial system, which is not familiar to their knowledge or their observance. Upon such considerations, the Court has on some occasions laid it down that the European Law of Nations is not to be applied in its full vigour to the transactions of persons of the description of the present claimants, and residing in that part of the world, (i. e. Mahommedan merchants residing in the kingdom of Morocco.) But on a point like this, the breach of a blockade, one of the most simple and universal operations of war in all ages and countries, excepting such as are merely savage, no such indulgence can be shown. It must not be understood by them, that if an European army or fleet is blockading a town or port, they are at liberty to trade with that port. If that could be maintained, it would render the obligation of a blockade perfectly nugatory. They in common with all other Nations must be subject to this first and elementary principle of blockade. It is not a new operation of war; it is as old and general as war itself. The subjects of the Barbary States could not be ignorant of the general rules applying to a blockaded port so far as concerns the interests and duties of neutrals²⁹." But in a matter of form which involved only a secondary question of International Right, the same eminent Jurist upheld the transfer of a ship which had been captured by an Algerine Cruiser, and subsequently sold bond fide to a Christian Merchant, although it was not established that the ship had been formally condemned by the sentence of a Prize tribunal. The Court presumed from the fact that the sale was authorized by the State, and as no remonstrance had been made against it by the owner of the vessel, that there had been adequate grounds for the confiscation of the vessel according to their notion for some breach of Treaty-Regulations, "as it is by the Law of Treaty only that these Nations hold themselves to be bound, conceiving (as some other people have foolishly imagined) that there is no other Law of Nations, but that which is derived from Positive Compact and Convention³⁰."

§ 97. The Conventional Law of Nations is sometimes spoken of as the Diplomatic branch of the Law of Nations, and Diplomacy, in accordance with this view, is the Science which is conversant with Negotiations and Treaties. This distinction has not been hitherto noted, and Diplomacy has been in general regarded merely as an Art. It must be admitted that the practice of Sovereigns in the selection of Diplomatic Envoys has given some colour to the prejudices of mankind against the very name of Diplomacy; and an able Diplomatist has come to be a proverbial designation for a skilful negotiator, who can bring about an arrangement quocunque modo in

The Diplomatic Science.

²⁹ The Hurtige Hane, 3 Robinson's Reports, p. 325.

³⁰ The Helena, 4 Rob. p. 4.

favour of the party whose interests he represents. But Diplomacy as a Science has higher ends in view, and the true art of the Diplomatist is shown in easing the friction of International intercourse, and in smoothing the difficulties which may occasionally embarrass that intercourse, either by a candid interpretation of existing Treaty engagements, or by negotiating the adjustment of a fluctuating practice upon a sound basis of Conventional Law. For this purpose, however, the Diplomatist requires not merely a technical knowledge of the general rules which govern the intercourse of Nations, but a perfect acquaintance with the principles involved in those rules, and which must be respected in the application of them; and it is indispensable for his success in administering the Law of Nations, that he should have mastered the elements of its Philosophy.

Conventional Law
of Nations.

§ 98. "Treaties," it has been well observed by an American Statesman, "may be considered under several relations to the Law of Nations according to the several questions to be decided by them. They may be considered as simply repeating or affirming the General Law³¹: they may be considered as making exceptions to the General Law, which are to be a particular Law to the parties themselves: they may be considered as explanatory of the Law of Nations on points where its meaning is otherwise obscure or unsettled, in which case they are first a Law between the parties themselves, and next a sanction to the General Law, according to the reasonableness of the explanation, and the number and character of the parties to it: lastly, treaties may be regarded as forming a voluntary or positive Law of Nations. Whether the stipulations of a treaty are to be considered as an affirmance, or an exception, or an explanation, may sometimes appear upon the face of the treaty; sometimes being naked stipulations, their character must be determined by resorting to other evidences of the Law of Nations. In other words, the question concerning the Treaty must be decided by the Law, not the question concerning the Law by the Treaty³².” Mr. Madison’s observations in the above passage are valuable, as they show that treaties may be operative in very different ways. For instance, the effect of a treaty, if it is of a restrictive character, must be limited to the parties between whom the compact is made; if on the other hand it should be of a beneficial character, and should relax the rigour of the customary Law in their mutual favour, its operation may extend to other Nations. But this indirect result will depend not upon the force of the Convention as a Contract, for that only binds the parties to it, but on certain considerations of Right (Jus) dehors the treaty; and which may involve the nicest questions of International Jurisprudence.

³¹ The preambles or recitals of Treaties furnish sometimes valuable evidence in this respect, when they are against the interest of the party who makes them. Edinburgh Review, LXXVII. p. 312.

§ 99. Mr. Reddie, in his *Inquiries in International Law*³³, has suggested, that German writers generally, and particularly Martens and Klüber, have, in framing or constructing the science which they have denominated Droit des Gens Moderne de l’Europe, ascribed too much to express Conventions or Treaties, as sources of this Law. Their language³⁴ is considered by him to imply, that besides the obligation which

Views of Martens and others contrasted.

³² Madison’s Examination of the British Doctrine, London, 1806, p. 39.

³³ Reddie, Inquiries in Inter- national Law, pp. 157, and 339.

³⁴ Martens, Précis du Droit des Gens, Introduction, § 7. Klüber, Droit des Gens, § 2.

Treaties impose upon the immediate parties to the contract, some more General Law may be gathered from them, resulting from a concurrent mode of contracting, which will be binding upon Nations which are not parties to the treaties. "It is obvious, however, that no Common or General Law of Nations can be derived from the particular Treaties or Conventions of Nations, however similar they may be. Those treaties can be used for the construction of the Science, only in order to ascertain what has been propounded or recognised in them as their basis, and that basis is nothing else than Custom or Usage." Such is the reply which is given by an opposite school of writers represented by the Prussian Privy Councillor Schmalz³⁵, and by the anonymous author of the Traité Complet de Diplomatie. The former writer observes that Leibnitz, whose Codex Diplomaticus may be regarded as the foundation of the Diplomatic Science, "commenced his collection of treaties not with the idea that the contents of these treaties would supply a body of International Law, but because there would be found in them pre-eminently what principles the European Powers have recognised as right and just, or what they have pronounced or held to be so recognised, and to be unquestionable." The author of the Traité Complet de Diplomatie in a similar manner says, "Cependant il est évident, qu'on ne sauroit former un droit positif de l'ensemble des Conventions particulières des peuples, quelque semblables qu'elles fussent. Ces pactes ne peuvent servir de matériaux pour édifier la science, s'ils ne montrent ce que l'on y a reconnu pour base ; et cette base n'est autre chose, que la coutume³⁶."

³⁵ Schmalz, Europäisches Völkerrecht, B. I. § 10. and § 28.

³⁶ Traité Complet de Diplomatie, T. I. p. 41.

The difference is important between these two schools of Jurists. The former regard the principles as commending themselves to our acceptance by reason of their recognition in the treaties; the latter consider the treaties to demand our respect, so far as they furnish evidence of a very general and long prevailing usage.

§ 100. M. Ortolan in his work on the Diplomacy of the Sea³⁷, has combated Mr. Reddie's criticisms, and has vindicated the doctrine of Martens and Klüber, from what he considers to be a misapprehension of its true import. M. Ortolan holds that those eminent publicists did not pretend that the stipulations of a particular treaty could be a rule binding upon any but the parties to it, but that a series of treaties concluded at different epochs between different civilised Nations, exhibited an uniformity of principle in their stipulations, from which a theory of what is generally practised amongst Nations may be formed by abstraction, and this theory constitutes the Conventional Law of Nations. M. Ortolan then proceeds to cite a passage from one of the authors criticised by Mr. Reddie, in which it is contended that "the principle which is established in the greatest number of treaties ought to be regarded as the rule, and that which is found in the least number as the exception. That the question in dispute ought to be decided according to the principle contained in the greatest number of treaties, particularly if the greatest number are at the same time the most recent. For it may be inferred from this circumstance, that Nations have gradually abandoned an old principle for a new principle, and that

Ortolan's view of the effects of Conventions on General
Law.

³⁷ Règles Internationales et Diplomatie de la Mer, Tom. II. Appendice, p. 442.

by a change of principles they have worked a change in the Law of Nations."

Wheaton's earlier and later views.

§ 101. Wheaton, in a similar manner, in the earlier editions of his Elements of International Law, seems to have been inclined to assign to treaties too important a part in the formation of General International Law. "The effect of Treaties and Conventions between Nations," he observes, "is not necessarily restricted, as Rutherford has supposed, to those States which are direct parties to these compacts. They cannot, indeed, modify the original and preexisting International Law, to the disadvantage of those States which are not direct parties to the particular treaty in question. But if such a treaty (1) relaxes the rigour of the primitive Law of Nations in their favour, or (2) is merely declaratory of the preexisting Law, or (3) furnishes a more definite rule in cases where the practice of States has given rise to conflicting pretensions, *the Conventional Law thus introduced is not only obligatory as between the contracting parties, but constitutes a rule to be observed by them to all the rest of the world*³⁸. In support of this view, Wheaton refers to his History of the Law of Nations, and the remarks therein contained upon the Maritime Convention concluded in 1801 between Russia and Great Britain, which put the seal to the dissolution of the Second Armed Neutrality of the Baltic Powers³⁹.

Convention of 1801 between Russia and Great Britain.

A difficulty at once suggests itself in the way of the first and third of Wheaton's positions, namely, that as International obligations are under the Common Law of Nations reciprocal, if a State under ³⁸ Elements of International Law, third edition, Philadelphia, 1846, part I. c. 1. s. XVI. § 7.

³⁹ History of the Law of Nations, p. 14. § 9. pp. 408—420.

treaty-engagements with one Power, which come under either of those heads, is bound by the Common Law of Nations to observe the rule which accords with those treaty-engagements, not merely in its intercourse with that Power, but in its intercourse with all other Powers, those other Powers will be bound to reciprocate the rule, and they will thus be indirectly involved in engagements to which they are not consenting parties. This anomaly will be still more striking in the case, where the treaty-engagements are on a subject, "where the practice of different States has given rise to conflicting pretensions," and the States which are not parties to the treaties should be those which pursue a different practice from that, which the treaty has introduced between the contracting parties.

§ 102. In regard to Wheaton's second position, the Law of Contraband of War may be referred to by way of illustrating his mode of applying the principle. By the third section of the third Article of the Convention of 1801, Great Britain and Russia agreed to the same definition of Contraband of War which had been agreed upon between the two Powers in the temporary Convention of 1797. Wheaton⁴⁰ observes that this section does not contain "the concession of any special privilege to be thenceforth enjoyed by the contracting parties only, but the recognition of an universal and preexisting right, which, as such, could not justly be refused to any other Independent State," and that "it must be taken as laying down a general rule for all further discussions with any power upon the subject of Military and Naval Stores, and as establishing a principle of law which was to decide universally on a just interpretation of the technical term of Contraband of War." The doctrine of Bynkershoeck⁴¹ does not harmonize with Wheaton's view, for Bynkershoeck holds, that there is a Common Law of Nations as to Contraband of War, which has been deduced from reason and usage, and the usage of mankind is evidenced by the tenor of an almost perpetual series of treaties and ordinances on the subject.

Illustration as to Contraband of War.

⁴⁰ History of the Law of Nations, p. 415, 416.

Bynkershoeck's doctrine.

There is also a reservation contained in the concluding part of the third Section of the third Article of the Convention of 1801, which seems to be irreconcilable with Wheaton's Interpretation. It is agreed that the stipulations of the present Article shall not prejudice in any way the particular stipulations of either Crown with other Powers; whereby objects of a like kind shall be reserved, prohibited, or permitted⁴²! Wheaton considers this clause to apply only to subsisting treaties, and contends that its insertion countenances his construction of the Article, inasmuch as it was necessary for Great Britain, when she undertook to lay down an universal principle, applicable to all her transactions with every Independent State, to reserve the more favourable practice which her subsisting treaties had established with some other Powers. But the words of the Article seem to bear a more extensive meaning, and apply rather to contingent than to subsisting treaties, and are not limited necessarily to treaties more favourable to

⁴¹ Questiones Juris Publici L. I. c. 10. "Dixi ex perpetua quodammodo consuetudine paciscendi edicendique, quia unum forte alterumve pactum quod a consuetudine recedit, jus Gentium non mutat."

⁴² "Il est aussi convenu, que ce qui est stipulé dans le présent article, ne portera aucune préjudice aux stipulations particulières de l'une ou de l'autre couronne avec d'autres puissances, par lesquelles des objets de pareil genre seroient réservés, prohibés ou permis." Martens, Recueil, VII.

p. 262.

Great Britain, as it speaks of Treaties which should permit, as well as of those which should prohibit similar objects.

It was unnecessary for the two Powers to declare that this treaty should not prejudice the subsisting treaties of Great Britain with other powers, excepting ex majori cautela, to prevent any possible question between them on the subject ; for Great Britain could not set aside, under any circumstances, her Treaties with other Powers on the subject of Contraband of War, on the grounds that she had concluded a Treaty on other terms with Russia. On the other hand, this proviso would have been idle, had there been any principle of the Common Law of Nations which entitled any third Power to insist upon Great Britain and Russia observing towards itself a rule which accorded with their particular Treaty-engagements. In further illustration of the untenable nature of Wheaton's positions in regard to the particular subject of Contraband of War, the practice of Nations may be appealed to. Thus Great Britain during the war of the Spanish Succession made a Treaty with Denmark, under which ship-timber was recognised between the Two Powers as Contraband of War, and not to be imported into the enemy's port. France, being at such time at war with England, did not claim from Denmark, under the Law of Nations, the observance of a like rule in her favour, but insisted upon Denmark concluding an analogous Treaty with the French Crown. Such a measure would have been unnecessary, if the Law of Nations had bound Denmark to observe the same rule as to Contraband of War towards the enemies of other Powers with which she was at amity, as she had engaged herself by Treaty with Great Britain to observe towards the enemies of that Power. Yet there is no subject which concerns so intimately the interests of every Member of the Family of Nations, as the rights and obligations of Neutrality. Again, if the rule of Law was such as has been suggested by Wheaton, we should not find a special provision in treaties to the effect that the contracting party shall grant to each other the same immunities and privileges which they should grant to any other Nation, in other words, what is termed "the most favoured Nation clause." But this subject will be more fully discussed when we come to speak specially of Conventions. Meanwhile it may be useful to remark, that the Plenipotentiaries of the Seven Powers assembled in Congress at Paris on 16th April, 1856, who signed the Declaration respecting Maritime Law in time of War, with a view to establish an uniform doctrine and more beneficial practice, agreed to bring it to the notice of the States which did not take part in the Congress, and to invite them to accede to it. The Declaration was meanwhile to be binding only between the Powers who had acceded to it. But this proviso is idle, if Wheaton's Theory be correct, that the Conventional Law thus introduced, seeing that it relaxes the rigour of the primitive Law of Nations, and at the same time furnishes "a more definite rule in a case where the practice of states has given rise to conflicting pretensions," is not only binding on the contracting parties, but "constitutes a rule to be observed by them to all the rest of the world." The United States of North America, for instance, have been formally invited to accede to the Convention of Paris, but they have declined so to do, unless the European Powers will agree to modify still further their practice as to Prize of War on the High Seas. The remaining

Declaration of Maritime Law
at Paris,
16 April,
1856.

Powers of Europe who were not parties to the original Declaration, have since formally acceded to it⁴³.

§ 103. There may be exceptional cases in which articles of a Declaratory character are inserted in the Text of Public Acts of an International character, by the side of articles which are strictly the foundation of a Contract, and those Declaratory articles may apply to all Nations. Thus in the Final Act of the Congress of Vienna (9 June, 1815) several Declaratory Acts of one or more of the Powers assembled in Congress were in substance incorporated in the form of Articles, or formally recognised as if annexed in extenso. Amongst these the 109th Article may be specially referred to as expressly applicable to all Nations, which declares the navigation of all rivers, which traverse or separate the territories of the Powers which have signed the Treaty, to be free to all the world. “La navigation dans tout le cours des rivières indiquées dans l'article précédent, du point où chacun d'elles devient navigable jusqu'à son embouchure, sera entièrement libre, et ne pourra, sous le rapport de commerce, être interdite à personne, bien entendu que l'on se conformera aux réglemens relatifs à la police de cette navigation, lesquels seront conçus d'une manière uniforme pour tous, et aussi favorable que possible au commerce de toutes les Nations⁴⁴.” The Regulation, on the other hand, respecting the

Preambles and Recitals of a Declaratory Character.

⁴³ It is most satisfactory to find, that in the last (sixth) edition of Wheaton's Elements, (Boston, 1857,) edited after his death by Mr. William Beach Laurence, the objectionable doctrine which has been discussed in the preceding sections is no longer maintained. The passages which appear in the earlier editions, and which contain the reference to Mr. Rutherforth's work, as well as Wheaton's three positions, are discarded, and their place is supplied by some general remarks which are more in accordance with the doctrine of Bynkershoek.

⁴⁴ Martens, Nouveau Recueil, II. p. 427.

rank of Diplomatic Agents which was incorporated in the General Act⁴⁵, is an instance of a provision virtually applicable to all Nations, but the Powers which agreed to the Regulation were extremely careful to disclaim any right to impose it upon other Powers. Again, in the Treaty of Paris, (30 March, 1856), Article XV is to this effect: "The Act of the Congress of Vienna having established the principles intended to regulate the navigation of rivers which separate or traverse different States, the Contracting Parties stipulate amongst themselves that those principles shall in future be equally applied to the Danube and its mouths. They declare that this arrangement henceforth forms part of the Public Law of Europe, and take it under their guaranty."

Objections to the idea of any Law, as such, between Nations.

§ 104. Certain writers, both in England and in France, have expressed a doubt how far the Rules of conduct which prevail amongst Nations can properly be regarded or spoken of as Laws, on the ground that they are not prescribed by any superior Power. Thus Mr. Austin says⁴⁶, "that the Law of Nations obtaining between Nations is not Positive Law, for every Positive Law is set by a given Sovereign to a person or persons in a state of subjection to its author." He observes further, that, "the law obtaining between Nations is law (improperly so called) set by general opinion. The duties which it imposes are enforced by moral sanctions; by fear on the part of Nations, or by fear on the part of Sovereigns of provoking general hostility, and incurring its probable evils, in case they shall violate maxims generally received and respected." Mr. Austin accordingly considers that the science which is conversant with the positive rights and obligations of Nations should be styled the science of Positive International Morality. To a similar effect M. de Rayneval writes⁴⁷, "there can be no right (droit) where there can be no law (loi), and there is no law where there is no Superior; without law, obligations, properly so called, cannot exist; there is only a moral obligation resulting from natural reason; such is the case between Nation and Nation." He further says, that "law is a rule of conduct, deriving its obligation from sovereign authority, and binding only on those persons who are subject to its authority. Nations being independent of one another acknowledge no Sovereign from whom they can receive Law (loi), and all their relative duties result from right or wrong, from convention or usage, to none of which can the term Law be properly applied."

⁴⁵ Art. CXVIII.

⁴⁶ Austin on Jurisprudence, p. 208.

§ 105. It is however not a valid objection to the existence of juridical relations between Nations, that they are not, like the domestic law of a State, defined by the Sovereign Power, or that they are not enforced by the executive authority of a political Superior. If those relations can be accurately defined howsoever, and can be enforced at all, they are not merely relations of Morality, but relations of Law. The History of the European Law of Nations shows that the more powerful Nations have, as occasion required, used their individual strength to enforce its rules, and that the less powerful Nations have combined their forces from time to time, and by their united strength compelled the more Powerful States to respect them. Such leagues for the enforcement of the reciprocal rights and obligations of Nations have been the means of maintaining a Balance of Power amongst the European International Morality distinct from the Law of Nations.

⁴⁷ De Rayneval, Institutions du droit de la Nature et des Gens, L. I. p. 8. n. 10.

Nations, whereby the independence of the weaker states is protected from aggression, and the observance of settled rules of intercourse amongst Nations is secured. Wherever a Rule of Conduct is thus capable of being enforced it ceases to be a mere Rule of Morality, binding on the conscience of men, and may in contradistinction be termed without risk of confusion a Rule of Law ⁴⁸. There are, however, many questions between Nations which involve matters of International Morality, and the Rules of International Morality ⁴⁹ are supplemental to the Rules of International Law. Law may prevent wrong, but it cannot always secure right, and Morality here steps in to the aid of Law between Nations, precisely as it comes to the aid of Law between individual human beings. Mr. Chancellor Kent has well observed, "that the Law of Nations is a complex system, composed of various ingredients; it consists of general principles of right and justice, equally suitable to the government of individuals in a state of natural equality, and to the relation and conduct of Nations; of a collection of usages and customs, the growth of civilisation and commerce; and a code of Conventional and Positive Law. In the absence of these latter regulations, the intercourse and conduct of Nations are to be governed by principles fairly to be deduced

⁴⁸ It appears to be a well founded distinction between Law and Morality, that wherever the sanctions of a rule of conduct are Physical, namely, wherever the sanction is fear of injury to person or property, the rule may be properly ranked under the head of Law; where the sanctions of a rule of conduct are only to be discovered in the human conscience, it is a rule of Morality as distinguished from Law.

⁴⁹ Mr. Senior proposes to distinguish the Natural Law of Nations by the term International Morality, and to confine the term International Law to the rules of conduct, whether consistent or not with International Morality, which are sanctioned by the public opinion of Nations. Edinburgh Review, LXXVII. p. 306.

from the rights and duties of Nations and the nature of moral obligations; and we have the authority of lawyers of antiquity, and some of the first masters in the modern school of Public Law, for placing the moral obligation of Nations and of individuals on similar grounds, and for considering individual and national Morality as parts of one and the same Science⁸⁰."

⁸⁰ Kent's Commentaries of American Law. Part I. Lecture 1.

CHAPTER VII.

RIGHT OF SELF-PRESERVATION.

Absolute and Conditional Rights of Nations—Right of Self-Defence—Treaty Limitations of such Right—Right of Self-Aggrandisement—Right of anticipating Attack—Right of Confederation—The Balance of Power.

Absolute
and Conditional Rights of
Nations.

§ 106. EVERY Nation has certain rights with regard to other Nations, which pertain to its moral being as an Independent Political Body, and the enjoyment of which is indispensable to its existence as such. These Rights may be termed Primary and Absolute Rights¹, as they are coordinate with the Being of a Nation, and are not dependent upon particular conditions of International Life. There are other rights to which all Nations are entitled, but not under all circumstances, which arise out of the intercourse of Nations with one another, and which cease with the circumstances which give rise to them. These may be distinguished as Secondary or Conditional Rights, some of them being incident to a state of amity, others being coincident only with a state of war. The Primary or Absolute Rights of Nations rest upon a foundation of Moral Truth, "the proofs of which are to be referred to some such certain notions," to use the language of Grotius², "as none can deny without doing violence to his own judgment." The Secondary or Conditional Rights rest upon a basis of historical fact. The former are inseparably connected with the free Moral agency of Independent Political Bodies, the latter have grown up with the exercise of that free Moral agency, and with the mutual recognition of its consistency with the varying circumstances of International intercourse.

✓ Klüber, § 36. ✓ Wheaton, Elements, pt. II. c. 1. § 1.

* De Jure Belli et Pacis, Prolegomena, § 39.

§ 107. Of the Primary or Absolute Rights of a Nation the most essential, and as it were the Cardinal ^{Right of Self-Defence.} Right, upon which all others hinge, is that of Self-Preservation. This Right necessarily involves, as subordinate Rights, all other Rights which are essential as means to secure this principal end. Amongst these, the foremost is the Right of Self-Defence. An Independent Political Society, which is not in a condition to repel aggression against its Territory, or against the Persons or Property of its Members, is unequal to the object of its Institution. "The Nation," writes Vattel ³, "ought to put itself in such a state as to be able to repel and humble an unjust enemy. This is an important duty which the care of its own perfection and even its Self-Preservation imposes both on the State and on its Conductor." Hence a Nation is entitled, consistently with the maintenance of peaceful relations towards other Nations, to fortify its Territories, to train up its Population generally in the use of arms, to maintain a portion of its Population under arms, in the form either of a standing army or a permanent war-navy, to equip itself with stores and munitions of war, and to form defensive alliances with other Nations. The presumption of Natural Law is, that all measures of this kind which do not endanger the safety of other Nations, are undertaken bond fide for the security of National Independence, and the exercise of the Natural Right of a Nation in these matters is only controlled de jure by the equal and corresponding Rights of other Nations. "A Nation," writes Vattel ⁴, "is sufficiently powerful, when it is capable of causing itself to be respected, and of repelling whoever would attack it." Within these limits no Nation is bound to give account of its conduct to any other Nation. But the equal and corresponding Rights of other Nations come at once into play, if a Nation should increase its armaments to an extraordinary extent. Under such circumstances, any other Nation, in pursuance of its own right of Self-Defence, may ask for explanation, if it either sees in the armaments of its Neighbour immediate occasion for alarm, or anticipates possible danger to itself or its Allies. A refusal to furnish explanation, when it has been asked for in a courteous tone and with an amicable spirit, will justify counter-armaments, and may sometimes even justify immediate measures of hostile repression ⁵.

³ Droit des Gens, L. I. c. 14. § 177.

⁴ Ibid. § 185.

Treaty Limitations of Right of Self-Defence.

§ 108. Exceptional cases occur de facto, in which the limits, within which a Nation may lawfully exercise its Right of Self-Defence, have been narrowed by special conventions freely entered into with other Nations.

Thus the exercise of the Right of a Nation to fortify its territory has been sometimes limited by treaty-engagements. In such cases the exercise of that Right by the erection of fortifications of a particular kind has been deemed to be inconsistent with the safety of another Nation. Thus by the Treaty of Utrecht, (anno 1713,) confirmed by the subsequent treaties of Aix-la-Chapelle, (anno 1748,) and of Paris, (anno 1763,) France engaged herself to Great Britain not to fortify the town of Dunkirk towards the sea, as such fortifications were deemed by Great Britain to be inconsistent with her just security. By the treaty of ⁵ Klüber, Droit des Gens, 118; Wheaton's Elements, part § 40; Martens, Précis, § 117, II. c. 1.

Luneville⁶, (anno 1801,) France restored to the Princes of the Germanic Empire all the conquests which her armies had made on the right bank of the Rhine, on the express condition however, that the ceded fortresses should continue permanently in the state in which they were at the time of their evacuation by the French armies. By the Treaty of Paris, (anno 1815⁷.) France engaged herself to the Allied Powers not to rebuild the Fortifications of Huningen, which had been a source of disquietude to the City of Bâle, and not to replace them by any other Fortifications at a distance of less than three miles from that city. Again, the exercise of the Right of a Nation to maintain a portion of its population under arms, has been subjected to limitation by treaty-engagements, more particularly with regard to a war navy. Thus the Genoese in their Treaty with France, (anno 1683,) undertook to reduce the number of their vessels of war in commission, and the Ottoman Porte and Russia respectively engaged themselves to the European Powers who signed in conjunction with them the Treaty of Paris⁸, (anno 1856,) by a special Convention annexed to that Treaty, and declared by Article XIV of that Treaty to form part of it, not to maintain severally more than ten vessels of war of a limited tonnage on the waters of the Black Sea⁹.

§ 109. A Nation is not entitled to oppose itself to the territorial aggrandisement of another nation, unless that aggrandisement be actually prejudicial to its rights, or visibly threatens to become so¹⁰. War is not

Right of Self-Ag-grandisement.

⁶ Martens, Recueil, vii. p. 296.

⁷ Martens, Nouveau Recueil, II. p. 682.

⁸ Martens, N. R. Gén. XV. p. 786.

⁹ This Convention was abrogated with the consent of all the Signatory Powers of the Treaty of Paris at the Conferences of London, January 17, 1871.

¹⁰ Grotius de Jure Belli et Pacis, L. II. c. 1. § 17. Wolff, Jus Gentium, § 640.

justifiable on any other ground than that of redressing actual wrong, or of preventing intended aggression. A Nation, which by any just means enlarges its dominions by the incorporation of new Provinces with the free will of their inhabitants, or by the occupation of vacant territory to which no other Nation can lay claim, is pursuing the legitimate object of its Being, as a Political Society instituted for the promotion of the common welfare of its members¹¹. "A State," writes Vattel, "that increases her power by all the acts of good government, does no more than what is commendable: she fulfils her duty towards herself without violating those which she owes to other Nations¹²." "The right of every Independent State," writes Mr. Wheaton, "to increase its national dominions, wealth, population, and power, by all innocent and lawful means—such as the pacific acquisition of new territory, the discovery and settlement of new countries, the extension of its navigation and fisheries, the improvement of its revenues, arts, agriculture, and commerce, the increase of its military and naval force—is an incontrovertible right of Sovereignty, generally recognised by the usage and opinion of Nations." All writers on Public Law¹³ agree that an increase of Power cannot alone, and of itself, give any Nation a right to take up arms in order to oppose it. The internal development of the resources of a country, although the increase of its population and wealth is the surest means of augmenting its power, has never yet been considered a just cause of alarm to other Nations, for such augmentation is in perfect accordance with the moral end of a Nation's Being, and, being gradual, is not suggestive of any evil intention towards others. In the same way the settlement of Colonies in distant lands, and the acquisition of Dependencies in remote quarters of the world, have been regarded as legitimate means of external development, which a Nation may pursue without giving to other Nations just cause of apprehension for their own safety. It would be contrary to Morality for Nations to combine for the purpose of retarding the innocent growth of the power of a State, which owing to the superior merits of its Political Institutions, or through the enlightened guidance of wise rulers, is enabled to advance more rapidly in the career of civilisation than its neighbours, and, as a consequence of such advance, to attain to greater material prosperity. The usage of Nations in this respect accords with the dictates of right Reason.

¹¹ Klüber, § 41.

¹² Elements of International

¹³ Droit des Gens, L. III. c. 3. Law, pt. II. c. 1. § 3.

§ 110. On the other hand, an increase of power, if it be accompanied by the will to abuse that power, creates good ground for alarm, and may justify a recourse to arms¹⁴. "A Nation," writes Vattel, "which has a neighbour at once powerful and ambitious, has her all at stake. As men are under the necessity of regulating their conduct in most cases by probabilities, those probabilities claim their attention in proportion to the importance of the subject; and, to make use of a geometrical expression, their right to obviate a danger is in a compound ratio of the degree of probability and the greatness of the evil threatened. If the evil in question be of a supportable nature, if it be only some slight loss, matters are not to be precipitated; there is no great danger in delaying our opposition to it, until there be a certainty of our being threatened. But if the safety of the anticipating attack.

Right of

¹⁴ Wolff, Jus Gentium, §§ 651, 652.

State lies at stake, our precaution and foresight cannot be carried too far¹⁵." Accordingly, as experience shows that there is in human nature a tendency to abuse power wherever it may be done with impunity, the circumstance, that the possession of power is generally accompanied with the will to abuse it, entitles a State, when its safety is at stake, to treat the first appearance of such a combination of power and will as a sufficient warning¹⁶. Further, if a Nation has exhibited unmistakable signs of undue ambition or rapacity, she becomes an object of suspicion to her neighbours, whose duty it is to stand their ground against her, and if she is at any moment on the point of acquiring a formidable accession of power, they may demand securities from her, and if she hesitates to give them, they may prevent the probable danger to themselves by force of arms¹⁷. When the safety of the State is at stake, the Right of Self-Preservation may warrant a Nation in extending its precautionary measures beyond the limits of its own dominions, and even in trespassing with that object on a neighbour's territory. As the Right of Self-Preservation is prior and paramount to the Right of Dominion and Property in the case of individuals, so the Right of Self-Preservation is prior and paramount to the Right of Territorial Inviolability in the case of Nations¹⁸, and if ever these Rights conflict, the former is entitled to prevail within the limits of the necessity of the case¹⁹. Thus, if a Nation takes possession

¹⁵ Droit des Gens, Lib. III.

c. 3. § 44.

¹⁶ Potentia igitur crescens in hoc casu non modo inter rationes suasorias locum habet, sed in ipsas quoque justificas influit, quatenus abusus potentiae non amplius dubius. Wolff, § 650.

¹⁷ Vattel, L. III. c. 3. § 49, 50.

¹⁸ Phillimore, Tom. I. § 214.

¹⁹ Genti unicuique competit jus ad ea quibus periculum interitus avertere et ea, quae interitum afferre possunt, vitare potest, quantum datur. Wolff, Jus Gentium, § 34.

of another Nation's territory with a view to conduct hostile operations against a third Nation, the third Nation may in virtue of its Right of Self-Preservation lawfully pass the frontier of the territory, which has been so occupied, for the purpose of dislodging its enemy from it. Urgent and indisputable danger may even authorise a Nation to occupy the territory of a neutral Nation, in order to prevent the execution of an enemy's intention to occupy it for the purposes of carrying on its hostilities with greater advantage, whenever the Nation to which the territory belongs is unable or unwilling to defend it. But the exercise of this Right, which Klüber²⁰ regards as a Right of Necessity, entails the obligation to make compensation to the neutral State for any damages which may have accrued to it²¹.

§ 111. Two or more Nations have a right to unite themselves into one Independent Political Body, so as to become one Nation, provided the views, by which they are so actuated, be not prejudicial to other Nations. But if each of the Nations in question be able separately and without assistance to govern and support itself, and to defend itself from insult and aggression, it may be reasonably presumed, that the object of their union is to obtain dominion over their neighbours, and on occasions where it is impossible or too dangerous to wait for an absolute certainty, other Nations will be justified in acting on a reasonable

Right of Confederation.

²⁰ Klüber, Pt. II. § 44.

²¹ Extreme necessity may even authorise the temporary seizure of a neutral town, and the putting a garrison therein, with a view to cover ourselves from the enemy, or to prevent the execution of his designs against that town, when the sovereign is not able to defend it. But when the danger is over, we must immediately restore the place, and pay all the charges, inconveniences, and damages, which we have occasioned by seizing it. Vattel, L. III. c. 3. § 122.

presumption, and may forthwith have recourse to measures of Self-Defence. On these grounds, Vattel²² maintains, that the Nations of Europe would have been justified in combining together against Louis XIV of France, if he had attempted to unite the Monarchy of Spain to that of France; for to have tamely suffered an union of the two Monarchies in the person of a Prince who had already given proofs of imperious pride and insatiable ambition, "would have been, according to all the rules of human probability, equivalent to surrendering the rest of Europe into servitude, or at least would have rendered the condition of each European State too critical and precarious to be endurable by Independent Political Bodies. The safety, therefore, of the other Nations of Europe would have justified them in opposing by anticipation such a formidable accession to the power of so ambitious a Prince." The right is still clearer, if a formidable Power should betray an unjust and ambitious disposition by doing the least injustice to another Power²³. "In such a case, all Nations may avail themselves of the occasion," writes Vattel, "and by joining the injured Party thus form a Coalition of strength, in order to humble the ambitious Potentate, and disable him from so easily oppressing his neighbours, or keeping them in continual awe and fear. For an injury gives to the injured Party a right to provide for his future safety by depriving an unjust Aggressor of the means of doing injury, and it is lawful and even praiseworthy to assist an injured Party, and to aid him in obtaining redress and in protecting himself from injury²⁴." The supreme arbitrator between Nations is the sword, but force of arms is not

²² Droit des Gens, L. III. c. 3.
§ 44.

²³ Wolff, Jus Gentium, § 651.
²⁴ Vattel, L. III. c. 3. § 45.

the only expedient by which Nations may guard themselves against a Formidable Power. There is a moral sanction to the mutual duties of Nations, in the fear of provoking general hostility and incurring its probable evils, in case a Nation should violate the Common Law; and these mutual sanctions are enhanced by the formation of Confederacies amongst the less powerful Nations for the purpose of maintaining the Balance against a Nation, whose Power causes them alarm ²⁵.

§ 112. The Right of Confederacy under the Natural Law of Nations is at the foundation of the Right of Intervention in the interest of what has been termed, since the Peace of Utrecht, (anno 1713,) the Balance of Power. The System of Balance, or European Equilibrium, is a creation of Positive Law. The outlines of the System may be discovered in the Provisions of the Treaty of Westphalia, (anno 1648,) and of the Treaties of Copenhagen, (anno 1648,) and of Oliva, (anno 1660,) but the express recognition of the System of Balance, as a rule of Positive Law, dates from the Treaties of Utrecht, (anno 1713,) concluded expressly according to the recital in the Treaty between Great Britain and Spain, "Ad formandam stabilendamque pacem ac tranquillitatem Christiani orbis Justo Potentiæ Æquilibrium" ²⁶. The maintenance of the Balance of Power in Europe is expressly set forth in the Acts of Renunciation to the Crown of Spain executed by the French Princes of the House of Bourbon, which are inserted in the body of the Treaties of Utrecht, as the motive cause of their Renunciation. The European System of Positive Law may be said to have rested upon the Treaties

²⁵ Wolff, Jus Gentium, § 652.
 Klüber, § 42.

²⁶ Schmauss. Corp. Jur. Gent. Academicum, p. 1419.

of Utrecht down to the French Revolution, (anno 1789,) although during that period various elements were introduced into that System, which were calculated to derange the Balance of Power established at Utrecht. The wars of the French Revolution crumbled that System into atoms, and one main object of the Congress of Vienna, next only to that of settling a General Peace, was to secure the maintenance of the repose of Europe by a readjustment of the Balance of Power. The intentions of the Allied Powers in this sense had been avowed by them in the Preamble of the Convention of Paris (23 April, 1814)²⁷. That the Balance of Power is a principle at the foundation of the Positive Law of Europe, and that the Powers which were Parties to the Treaties of Vienna acted upon that principle in framing the Great European Settlement of 1815, has been recorded by the Five Powers in several important International Acts. Thus the Five Great Powers, which were Parties to the Treaty of Paris, having been invited by the King of Holland to assist him in the settlement of the disturbed relations between the Belgian Provinces and the Dutch Crown, placed formally on record their view of the grounds which justified their Intervention. Having expressly stated²⁸, that the original object of uniting the Belgian Provinces with Holland was to establish a Just Equilibrium in Europe, they proceed to say that the Five Powers had a right, and that events imposed upon them a duty, to prevent the Belgian Provinces, as an Independent State, causing any disturbance of the general security and the European

²⁷ Martens, N. R. I. p. 706. (19 Feb. 1831.) Martens, N. R.

²⁸ Nineteenth Protocol of the X. p. 197. British and Foreign Conferences of the Five Powers, State Papers, XVIII. p. 779.

Equilibrium. The same principle was affirmed in the Treaty of London (8 May, 1852)²⁹, concluded between the Five Powers and Sweden on the one hand, and the King of Denmark on the other hand, in recognition of the establishment of an order of Succession in the Danish Provinces of the Monarchy, which should harmonize with that already existing in the German Duchies. It was on that occasion formally declared, "that the maintenance of the integrity of the Danish Monarchy was intimately connected with the general interests of the European Equilibrium." The same principle was relied upon by the Governments of Great Britain and France, when they protested in 1851 against the proposed incorporation of any non-German States into the Germanic Confederation³⁰, as a derangement of the European Equilibrium. The last great occasion for the recognition of the principle of the Balance of Power, as lying at the foundation of that branch of the Positive Law of European Nations, which may be termed the Public Conventional Law of Europe, was furnished by the latest settlement of the Eastern Question. The Preamble of the Treaty of Constantinople, concluded between Great Britain and France on the one hand, and the Ottoman Porte on the other (March 12, 1854)³¹, recites, "that her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, and his Majesty the Emperor of the French, have been requested by his Highness the Sultan to assist him in repelling the attack, which has been made by his Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias on the Territory of the Sublime Porte, an attack whereby the Integrity of the Ottoman Porte and the Independence of the Sultan's throne are endangered, and as their Majesties are perfectly convinced that the existence of the Ottoman Empire in its present extent is of essential importance to the Balance of Power amongst the States of Europe; and as they have in consequence agreed to afford his Highness the Sultan the assistance which he has requested to this end, their aforesaid Majesties and his Highness the Sultan have deemed it proper to conclude a Treaty, so as to attest their intentions in conformity with the above."

²⁹ Annuaire Historique Universel, 1851. Appendix, p. 191. randum. App. p. 176. English note. App. p. 181.

³⁰ Annuaire. French Memo- 31 Martens, N. R. Gén. XV. p. 565.

In the Conferences subsequently held at Vienna in 1855 between France, Great Britain, Austria, the Ottoman Porte, and Russia, the principle of maintaining the European Equilibrium was repeatedly invoked by all Parties, as supplying a rule for approving or rejecting the various proposals of accommodation. This principle was more especially relied upon in reference to the Neutralisation of the Black Sea, and to the maintenance of the ancient Rule of the Ottoman Porte, according to which the Passage of the Straits leading from the Mediterranean into the Black Sea is closed against the vessels of war of all Nations, whilst the Ottoman Porte remains at peace with all Nations³².

³² Protocol to the 12th Conference, (21 April, 1155.) Martens, N. R. Gén. XV. p. 676.

CHAPTER VIII.

RIGHT OF ACQUISITION.

Establishment of a Nation in a Country—Juridical Notion of Possession—Possession as founding a Right of Property—Primitive and Derivative Acquisition—Settlement of a Nation—Right of Occupation—Right of Discovery—Notification of Discovery—Acts Confirmatory of Occupation—Discovery followed by Settlement constitutes a Perfect Title—Extent of Right of Discovery—Extent of Right of Occupation—Principles of Law advanced by the United States of America—Discovery of the Mouth of a River—Conflict with Acknowledged Law—Right of Settlement—Usucaption or Prescription—Territory of the Hudson's Bay Company—Right of contiguity—Arcifinious States—Discovery of the New World—Settlements in the New World—Possessory Right of Native Indians—Agriculture in relation to Pasture—The Indian Title—Derivative Acquisition—Title by Cession.

§ 113. BY virtue of its Independence and its Right of Self-Preservation, every Nation is entitled to perfect freedom of action with a view to promote its own welfare within a sphere, which is consistent with the Independence and Self-Preservation of other Nations. It may accordingly not merely make use of the gifts of nature for the satisfaction of its immediate wants, but, if they are susceptible of exclusive possession, it may appropriate them to meet its future wants. This Right of a Nation to possess a thing (Jus Possidendi) applies not merely to the fruits of the earth, but to the soil which produces it. Vattel regards the right of a Nation to possess a territory as incident to its Right of Self-Preservation. "The earth," he writes¹, "belongs to mankind in general, destined by the Creator to be their common habitation, and to supply them with food ; they all possess a Natural

Establishment of a Nation in a Country.

¹ Droit des Gens, L. I. § 203.

Right to inhabit it, and to derive from it whatever is necessary for their sustenance and suitable to their wants. But when the human race became extremely multiplied, the earth was no longer capable of furnishing spontaneously and without culture sufficient support for its inhabitants ; neither could it have received proper cultivation from wandering tribes of men continuing to possess it in common. It therefore became necessary that those tribes should fix themselves somewhere, and appropriate to themselves portions of land, in order that they might, without being disturbed in their labour, or being disappointed in the fruits of their industry, apply themselves to render those lands fertile, and thence derive their sustenance. Such must have been the origin of the Rights of Property and Domain, and it was a sufficient ground to justify their establishment. Since their introduction, the Right, which was common to all mankind, is individually restricted to what each lawfully possesses. The country which a Nation inhabits, whether that Nation has emigrated thither in a body, or the different families of which it consists were previously scattered over the country, and there uniting formed themselves into a political society, that country, I say, is the Settlement of the Nation, and it has a peculiar and exclusive right to it."

Juridical Notion of Possession.

§ 114. The Right of a Nation to possess a territory being admitted, it follows that we should consider what constitutes Lawful Possession ; in other words, what constitutes Possession, not merely as the consequence of a Right, but as itself the Foundation of Rights. "All Definitions of Possession," writes Savigny², "however much they may differ from one another in terms, and even in substance, contain the same general principle as their basis, from which every inquiry into the subject must proceed. By the possession of a thing, we always conceive the condition, in which not only one's own dealing with the thing is physically possible, but every other person's dealing with it may be prevented. Thus the seaman possesses his ship, but not the water in which it moves, although he makes each of them subserve his purpose. The condition of a thing, which is termed Detention, and upon which all our notions of Possession are founded, is not by itself in any way an object of Legislation, and the Notion of it is not in itself a Juridical Notion, but it bears an immediate relation to a Juridical Notion, whereby it becomes itself an object of Legislation. For as Property consists in the legal power of dealing with a thing at will, and of excluding every one else from its enjoyment, the exercise of Property takes place by Detention, and Detention is accordingly the condition of Fact, which corresponds to Property as the condition of Law." The Right to possess (Jus Possidendi) thus forms part of the Theory of Property, and the act of Detention acquires a Juridical character in connection with the Right to possess.

² Das Recht des Besitzes. has been translated into English by Giessen, 1837, p. 2, 3. This work Sir Erskine Perry. London, 1848.

§ 115. The lawfulness of all possession depends upon what the later Roman Jurists call the modus acquirendi. The Act of Detention per se in the case of a person detaining a thing constitutes a condition of Fact, which has been termed by Jurists Natural Possession. The condition of Fact involved in bare Detention (nuda rei prehensio) is regarded as terminable at any moment; but if a person detains a thing animo sibi habendi, and manifests his intention of exercising ownership for himself, such con-

Possession
as founding a right of property.

tinuing Detention gives rise to a condition of Law, and it has consequently been termed Legal Possession. "Apiscimur possessionem animo et facto, neque per se animo aut per se corpore³." The condition of Law arises in this manner. There is an obligation of Natural Law upon all persons to refrain from Personal violence, for Personal inviolability is a Natural Right. But the continuing Detention of a thing, animo sibi habendi, cannot be interrupted or put an end to against the will of the party so detaining it, without violence to his person. There thus arises an obligation of Natural Law to refrain from disturbing a party who is in possession of a thing, as the Inviolability of the Person extends to those acts of disturbance, whereby the Person might at the same time be, however indirectly, interfered with. The Right of Property is thus a Corollary to the Right of Personal Inviolability, for the Right of Property in a thing, or the lawful power of dealing with it at will, may be said to have arisen, when all persons recognise the party in Possession of a thing to have a Right of excluding them from dealing with it, and that Right is de facto recognised, when all persons admit an obligation on themselves to refrain from disturbing him in his possession of it. Possession accordingly, that is, a continuing Detention animo sibi habendi as distinguished from bare Detention, gives rise to the right of not being disturbed; and when the Possession itself is rightful in its origin, the Right which ensues is a perfect Right. In respect of this Right, certain rules⁴, as to the acquisition and ³ Dig. L. XLI. Tit. II. § 3.

⁴ These rules, and many others which refer to Dominion and its incidents, are borrowed from the loss of Possession, have been established. The first rule is, that a person may take possession of a thing which has no owner, so as to acquire Rightful Possession of it; and Property is in such case acquired simultaneously with Possession. “Quod enim nullius est, id ratione naturali occupanti conceditur”⁵. The second rule is, that a person may acquire Rightful Possession of a thing of which the previous owner has renounced Possession, either relatively in his favour by Cession, or absolutely to the first comer by Abandonment.

Roman Jurisconsults, who held them to be institutions of the Jus Gentium, or common Law of all Nations.

§ 116. Rightful Acquisition, as the foundation of the Right of Property in individuals, is accordingly either primitive or *derivative*⁶. Primitive Acquisition is termed Occupation. “On appelle occupation un fait, par lequel quelqu’un déclare qu’une chose, qui n’est à personne, doit être à lui, et la réduit en tel état qu’elle peut être sa chose. Il paroit de là que le droit d’occuper une chose, ou de s’en emparer, appartient naturellement à chacun indifféremment, ou bien que c’est un droit commun de tous les hommes, et comme on appelle manière primitive d’acquérir celle par laquelle on acquiert le domaine d’une chose qui n’est à personne, il s’ensuit que l’occupation est la manière primitive d’acquérir”⁷.

Such being the Law of Nature in regard to primitive acquisition on the part of individuals, the Law of Nations is in perfect accord with it. “All mankind,” writes Vattel, “have an equal right to things that have not yet fallen into the hands of any one; and those things belong to the person who first takes possession of them. When, therefore, a Nation finds a country uninhabited and without an owner, it may lawfully take possession of it; and after it has sufficiently made known its will in this respect, it cannot be deprived of it by another Nation. Thus navigators going on voyages of discovery, and meeting with islands or other lands in a desert state, have taken possession of them in the name of their Nation, and this title has been usually respected, provided it was soon after followed by a real possession *."

⁵ Dig. L. XLI. Tit. I. § 3.

⁶ Grotius, L. II. c. 3. § 1.

⁷ Wolff, Institutions du Droit de la Nature et des Gens, § 210.

Settlement
of a Nation.

§ 117. Settlement accordingly in a country in the case of a Nation corresponds to the continuing Detention of a thing in the case of an individual, and the Natural Right of a Nation founded on Settlement corresponds to the Natural Right of an individual founded on Possession. There is thus an obligation of Natural Law upon all Nations to refrain from disturbing a Nation which has settled in a country, which was vacant at the time of its settlement. "Un état peut acquérir des choses qui n'appartiennent à personne (res nullius) par l'occupation (originaire), les biens d'autrui au moyen de conventions (occupation dérivative) . . . Pour que l'occupation soit légitime, la chose doit être susceptible d'une propriété exclusive, elle ne doit appartenir à personne; l'état doit avoir l'intention d'en acquérir la propriété et en prendre possession, c'est à dire, la mettre entièrement à sa disposition et dans son pouvoir physique. Ceci a lieu lorsqu'il a tellement influé sur la chose, qu'elle ne peut lui être enlevée sans lui ravir en même temps le fruit du changement légitime qu'il y a opéré *."

Right of
occupation.

§ 118. The exclusive Right of a Nation to Territory which it has acquired by Occupation, has been universally recognised by the Nations of Europe, and in respect of such Right certain rules have become established by usage, whereby the condition of Law constituting Occupation may be placed beyond doubt. The Natural Right of an individual to appropriate the object of his discovery rests upon the presumption that it has no owner, which presumption, in the case of the first comer, is a necessary presumption, and consequently a præsumptio juris et de jure. But the act of discovery alone does not constitute Occupation by the Law of Nations. The title which results from Discovery is only an inchoate title. It is not recognised in the Roman Law, nor has it a place in the system of Grotius or of Puffendorf. The principle, however, upon which it is based, is noticed by De Wolff.

* Droit des Gens, L. I. § 207.

* Klüber, Droit des Gens, Part II. c. 1. § 125.

“Pareillement si quelqu'un renferme un fond de terre dans des limites, ou le destine à quelque usage par un acte non passager, ou que se tenant sur ce fond limité, il dise en présence d'autres hommes qu'il veut que ce fond soit à lui, il s'en empare¹⁰.” M. Luzac has appended to this passage the following note, “Nous ne trouvons pas cette occupation dans le droit Romain. C'est sur elle que sont fondés les droits, que les puissances s'attribuent, en vertu des découvertes.”

§ 119. A Nation is under an obligation towards other Nations analogous to that under which an individual stands towards other individuals with regard to the discovery of a thing, if it seeks to found an exclusive title to its possession upon the Right of Discovery. It must manifest in some way or other to other Nations its intention to appropriate the territory to its own purposes. The Comity of Nations then sanctions a presumption, that the execution of the intention will follow within a reasonable time the announcement of it. But Natural Reason requires that the Discovery should be notified to other Nations, otherwise if actual Possession has not ensued, the obvious inference would be that the Discovery was a transient act, and that the territory was never taken possession of animo et facto. A Discovery accordingly, which has been concealed from other Nations, has never been recognised as a good title to bar them from settling in a territory: it is an inoperative act. Lord Stowell¹¹ has accordingly noticed, as an indisputable fact, that in newly discovered countries, where a title is meant to be established for the first time, some act of Possession is usually done and proclaimed as a Notification of the fact.

¹⁰ Wolff, Institutions du Droit de la Nature et des Gens, § 213.

Notification of Discovery.

§ 120. The mode of Notification, in other words, what acts should be respected by the Comity of Nations, and be held sufficient to make known the intention of a Nation to avail itself of a discovery, has been a subject of much dispute. The disposition however of Writers, as well as of Statesmen, has been to limit rather than to extend the Comity of Nations in this respect. Thus Vattel writes, "The Law of Nations will therefore not acknowledge the Property and Sovereignty of a Nation over any uninhabited countries except those of which it has really taken possession, in which it has formed settlements, or of which it has actual use. In effect, when Navigators have met with desert countries in which those of other Nations had in their transient visits erected some monuments to show their having taken some possession of them, they have paid as little regard to that empty ceremony, as to the regulation of the Popes, who divided a great part of the world between the Crowns of Castile and Portugal¹²."

¹¹ The Fama, 5 Robinson, p. 115. ¹² Droit des Gens, L. I. § 208.

To the same purport, Martens writes, "Supposé que l'occupation soit possible, il faut encore qu'elle ait eu lieu effectivement ; que le fait de la prise de possession ait concouru avec la volonté manifeste de s'en approprier l'objet. La simple déclaration de volonté d'une Nation ne suffit pas, non plus qu'une Donation Papale, ou qu'une Convention entre deux Nations pour imposer à d'autres le devoir de s'abstenir de l'usage ou de l'occupation de l'objet en question. Le simple fait d'avoir été le premier à découvrir ou à visiter une île, &c., abandonnée ensuite, semble insuffisant, même de l'aveu des Nations, tant qu'on n'a point laissé de traces permanentes de possession et de volonté ; et ce n'est pas sans raison qu'on a souvent disputé entre les Nations, si des croix, des poteaux, des inscriptions, &c., suffisent pour acquérir ou pour conserver la propriété exclusive d'un pays, qu'on ne cultive pas ¹³."

Klüber to the same effect, writes thus, "Pour acquérir une chose par le moyen de l'occupation, il ne suffit point d'en avoir seulement l'intention, ou de s'attribuer une possession purement mentale ; la déclaration même de vouloir occuper, faite antérieurement à l'occupation effectuée par un autre, ne suffirait pas. Il faut qu'on ait réellement occupé le premier, et c'est par cela seul, qu'en acquérant un droit exclusif sur la chose, on impose à tout tiers l'obligation de s'en abstenir. L'occupation d'une partie inhabitée et sans maître du Globe de la Terre, ne peut donc s'étendre plus loin qu'on ne peut tenir pour constant qu'il y ait eu effectivement prise de possession, dans l'intention de s'attribuer la propriété. Comme preuves d'une pareille prise de possession, ainsi que de la continuation de la possession en propriété, peuvent servir tous les signes extérieurs qui marquent l'occupation et la possession continue¹⁴." To this passage there is appended the following note. "Le droit de propriété d'état peut, après le droit des Gens, continuer à exister, sans que l'état continue la possession corporelle. Il suffit qu'il existe un signe, qui dit que la chose n'est ni res nullius, ni délaissée. En pareil cas, personne ne saurait s'approprier la chose, sans ravir de fait à celui, qui l'a possédée jusqu'alors en propriété, ce qu'il y a opéré de son influence d'une manière légitime: enlever ceci, ce serait blesser le droit du propriétaire."

¹³ Précis du Droit des Gens, § 37.

Acts confirmatory of Occupation.

§ 121. It is difficult to lay down absolutely what constitutes a sufficient sign, that a territory has been effectively reduced into Possession after Discovery. Bynkershoek, who was originally opposed to the continuance of any exclusive Right founded on Occupation, unless natural Possession was maintained, subsequently qualified his view in deference to the objections of Christian Thomasius: "Res immobiles," writes Thomasius¹⁵, "quæ sunt nullius, occupatæ esse censentur, si cœptæ sunt custodiri, aut si cœperim solo uti ad id, ad quod destinatum est naturâ, et usus durat; V. G. Si ædificaverim in solo, si solum vallo et fossa vel sæpibus circumdederim, conservatur possessio, quamdiu continuatur custodia, etiamsi non incumbam possessioni, sed abeam. V. G. Si ager consitus sit, et fructus a me sotos ferat, si ager circumseptus sit, si ædes extructæ maneant, si clavem ad ædes habeam, si alios arceam ab usu rei." "Hæc ille," writes Bynkershoek, "et recte, nam omnibus his, quos recenset, modis possessio ex apprehensione cœpta, porro continuatur, et continuata possessione continuatur dominium. Culturâ

¹⁴ Droit des Gens, § 126.

Huberum de Jure Civitatis, L. II.

¹⁵ Annotationes ad Ulricum s. 11. § 43.

itaque et cura agri possessionem quam maxime indicat. Neque enim desidero vel desideravi unquam, ut tunc demum videatur quis possidere, si res mobiles ad instar testudinum dorso ferat suo, vel rebus immobilibus incubet corpore, ut gallinæ solent incubare ovis. Præter animum possessionem desidero, sed qualemcumque, quæ probet me nec corpore desuisse possidere ¹⁶."

§ 122. When Discovery has been followed by the Settlement of a Nation, other Nations in accordance with the Law of Nature recognise a perfect title in the occupant. Where discovery has not been immediately followed by settlement, but the fact of discovery has been notified, other Nations by courtesy pay respect to the notification, and the Usage of Nations has been to presume that Settlement will take place within a reasonable time; but unless discovery has been followed within a reasonable time by some sort of settlement, the presumption arising out of notification is rebutted by non user, and lapse of time gives rise to the opposite presumption of Abandonment. Thus in the Conference ¹⁷ held at London between the Commissioners of Great Britain and of the United States of North America in 1826, the British Commissioners, Messrs. Huskisson and Addington, maintained these views: "Upon the question how far prior discovery constitutes a legal claim of Sovereignty, the Law of Nations is somewhat vague and undefined. It is however admitted by the most approved writers, that mere accidental discovery, unattended by exploration, by formally taking possession in the name of the discoverer's Sovereign, by occupation and settlement more or less permanent, by purchase of the territory on receiving the Sovereignty from the Nation, constitutes the lowest degree of title ; and that it is only in proportion as first discovery is followed by any or all of these acts, that such title is strengthened and confirmed." Mr. Gallatin, on the other hand, the Plenipotentiary of the United States¹⁸, thus states the American view, "It may be admitted, as an abstract principle, that, in the origin of Society, first occupancy and cultivation were the foundation of the rights of private property and of National Sovereignty. But that principle, on which principally, if not exclusively, it would seem that the British Government wishes to rely, could be permitted, in either case, to operate alone and without restriction, so long only as the extent of vacant territory was such, in proportion to the population, that there was ample room for every individual and for every distinct community or Nation, without danger of collision with others. As in every Society, it had soon become necessary to make laws, regulating the manner in which its members should be permitted to occupy and to acquire vacant land within its acknowledged boundaries ; so also Nations found it indispensable for the preservation of peace, and for the exercise of distinct jurisdiction, to adopt, particularly after the discovery of America, some general rules, which should determine the important previous question, 'Who had a right to occupy.'

Discovery followed by Settlement constitutes a perfect title.

¹⁶ De Dom. Maris, c. 1. ¹⁷ British Statements annexed to the Protocol of the Sixth Conference.

"The two rules generally, perhaps universally, recognised and consecrated by the Usage of Nations, have followed from the nature of the subject.

"By virtue of the first, prior discovery gave a right to occupy, provided that occupancy took place within a reasonable time, and was ultimately followed by permanent settlement and by the cultivation of the soil."

¹⁸ American Counterstatement annexed to the Protocol of the Seventh Conference.

"In conformity with the second, the right derived from prior discovery and settlement, was not confined to the spot discovered or first settled. The extent of territory which would attach to such first discovery or settlement, might not in every case be precisely determined. But that the first discovery and subsequent settlement within a reasonable time of the mouth of a river, particularly if none of its branches had been explored prior to such discovery, gave the right of occupancy and ultimately of Sovereignty to the whole country drained by such river and its several branches, has been generally admitted. And in a question between the United States and Great Britain, her acts have with propriety been appealed to, as showing that the principles on which they rely accord with their own¹⁹."

§ 123. The question as to the extent of territory over which the discovery of a part gives rise to the right of occupancy, may receive a solution by reference to the principles of Law, which decide to what extent natural possession must go in order to give a title to more than is actually inhabited. It is not necessary in order to constitute the occupant of a thing the legal proprietor of it, that he should have natural possession of the whole of it; if he has possession of a part, which cannot be separated from the whole, he is in possession of the whole. The Roman Jurists applied this principle to the possession of land, "Quod autem diximus et corpore et animo acquirere nos debere possessionem, non utique ita"

Extent of
Right of Discovery.

¹⁹ Message of President Adams to Congress, Dec. 28, 1827.

accipiendum est, ut qui fundum possidere velit, omnes glebas circumambulet, sed sufficit quamlibet partem ejus fundi introire, dum mente et cogitatione hac sit, uti totum fundum usque ad terminum velit possidere ²⁰." In the case of a Legal Entity, as for instance the property of a farm or garden, the Law enables us to ascertain its boundaries by reference to records, and there is no practical difficulty in determining the extent of land over which the possession of a part carries with it the Right of Possession, (Jus Possessionis.) But in the case of an unoccupied country, the natural possession of a part cannot carry with it the legal possession of the whole; as if it were so, there would be no territory legally vacant on the mainland, seeing that the first settlers in any part of a great Continent would by virtue of occupying that part be in rightful possession of the whole.

Extent of
Right of Occupation.

§ 124. "If at the same time," writes Vattel²¹, "two or more Nations discover and take possession of an island or any other desert land without an owner, they ought to agree between themselves and make an equitable partition; but if they cannot agree, each will have the Right of Empire and the Domain in the parts in which they have first settled." So far Vattel seems to restrict the Right of Possession to the country actually taken possession of; but in another passage he indirectly points to something more. "It may happen²², that a Nation is contented with possessing only certain places, or appropriating to itself certain rights in a country which has not an owner, without being solicitous to take possession of the whole country. In this case, another Nation may take possession of what the first has neglected: but this cannot be done without allowing all the rights acquired by the first to subsist in their full and absolute Independence." Hence if a Nation has occupied a territory, it has a right to every thing, as appurtenant to the territory, which is necessary for the integrity and security of its possession. Upon an analogous principle, when a Nation has discovered a country, and notified its discovery, it is presumed to intend to take possession of the whole country within those natural boundaries which are essential to the Independence and Security of its Settlement, and its Right of Discovery is coextensive with such limits.

²⁰ Dig. XLI. Tit. II. § 3.

²¹ Droit des Gens, L. II. § 9.

²² Ibid. § 98.

§ 125. The principles applicable to such questions were discussed by the Commissioners of the United States of America, in the negotiations with the Commissioners of Spain, on the subject of the Western boundary of Louisiana. "The principles," they observe, "which are applicable to the case, are such as are dictated by reason, and have been adopted in practice by European Nations in the discoveries and acquisitions which they have respectively made in the New World. They are few, simple, intelligible, and at the same time founded in strict justice. The first of these is that, when any European Nation takes possession of any extent of sea-coast, that possession is understood as extending into the interior Country, to the sources of the rivers emptying within that coast, to all their branches, and the country they cover, and to give it a right in exclusion of all other Nations to the same²³. It is evident that some rule or principle must govern the rights of European Powers in regard to each other, in all such cases, and it is certain that none can be adopted, in those

Principles of Law advanced by the United States of America.

²³ Mémoire de l'Amérique, p. 116.

cases to which it applies, more reasonable or more just than the present one. Many weighty considerations show the propriety of it. Nature seems to have destined a larger range of territory so described for the same Society; to have connected its several parts together by a common interest, and to have detached them from others. If this principle is departed from, it must be by attaching to such discovery and possession a more enlarged or contracted scope of acquisition: but a slight attention to the subject will demonstrate the absurdity of either. The latter would be to restrict the rights of an European Power, who discovered and took possession of a new country, to the spot on which its troops or settlements rested: a doctrine which has been totally disclaimed by all the Powers who made discoveries and acquired possession in America. The other extreme would be equally improper; that is, that the Nation, who made such discovery should, in all cases, be entitled to the whole territory so discovered. In the case of an Island, whose extent was seen, which might be soon sailed round and preserved by a few forts, it may apply with justice; but in that of a Continent it would be absolutely absurd. Accordingly we find that this opposite extreme has been equally disclaimed and disavowed by the doctrine and practice of European Nations. The Great Continent of America, North and South, was never claimed or held by any one European Nation, nor was either great section of it. Their pretensions have always been bounded by more moderate and rational principles. The one laid down has obtained general assent²⁴."

Possession
of the coast

The Commissioners of the United States on this occasion, in applying the above principle to the claim of their Nation, were careful not to press the doctrine of virtual possession beyond those limits within which the Nations of Europe would be in accord with them. On the authority of the principle above stated, they say, "it is evident that by the discovery and possession of the River Mississippi in its whole length, and the Coast adjoining it, the United States are entitled to the whole country dependent on that River, the waters which empty into it, and their several branches within the limits on that coast." In other words, they maintain that the occupation of the sea-coast entitles a Nation to the possession of the inland territory, and of the navigable rivers included within it; in which position of Law all European Nations agree. But such a position of Law differs materially from that, which was contended for by Mr. Gallatin on behalf of the United States in the Conferences in London in 1827, already alluded to, (§ 122).

²⁴ British and Foreign State Papers, 1817-18, p. 327.

§ 126. The position of Law maintained on behalf of the United States by Mr. Gallatin in 1827, above alluded to, (§ 122,) had been previously advanced by Mr. Rush in 1824, when resident as Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States in London. "I asserted," he writes to the American Secretary of State, Hon. J. Quincy Adams, "that a Nation discovering a country by entering the mouth of its principal river at the sea-coast, must necessarily be allowed to claim and hold as great an extent of the Interior country as was described by the course of such principal river and its tributary streams²⁵."

The Plenipotentiaries of the United States in support of their position, appealed to the language of ²⁵ British and Foreign State Papers, 1825-26, p. 506.

ancient Charters accorded to Companies of Adventurers and to individual explorers by various European Sovereigns, as evidence of the practice of European Nations in regard to the rights resulting from discovery. It was replied on behalf of the British Plenipotentiaries, that those Charters had no valid force or effect against the subjects of other Sovereigns, but could only bind and restrain vigore suo those who were under the Jurisdiction of the Grantor of the Charters, and that although they might confer on the Grantees an exclusive title against the subjects of the same Sovereign Power, they could only affect the subjects of other Sovereign Powers, so far as the latter might be bound by the Common Law of Nations to respect acts of Discovery and Occupation, effected by the members of other Independent Political Communities. The reply of the British Commissioners was in perfect harmony with the principle under which Great Britain, France, and Holland refused to recognise the authority of the Papal Donation; by virtue whereof Spain and Portugal claimed to exclude all other European Nations from the possession and use of the lands and seas which had been granted to them in the famous Bull of Pope Alexander VI (anno 1493). Accordingly when Mendoza the Spanish Ambassador remonstrated against the expedition of Drake, Queen Elizabeth replied, that "she did not understand why either her subjects or those of any other European Power should be debarred from traffick in the Indies: that she did not acknowledge the Spaniards to have any title by donation of the Bishop of Rome, so she knew no right they had to any places other than those they were in actual possession of; for their having touched only here and there upon a Coast, and given names to a few rivers and capes, were such insignificant things as could in no way entitle them to property (proprietas) further than in the parts where they actually settled and continued to inhabit²⁶."

§ 127. The principle involved in the position of Law, advanced by the United States on the above occasions, seems not to be reconcilable with other positions of Law, in which all Nations agree. It is inconsistent, in the first place, with one of the positions of Law upon which the United States themselves rested their claims against Spain respecting the boundary of Louisiana in 1805, (§ 125,) namely, that the discovery and occupation of an extent of sea-coast by a Nation are understood to convey to that Nation a right of possession over the interior country as far as the watershed-line, which position of Law Messrs. Monroe and Pinckney, the Commissioners of the United States, then alleged to have been completely established by the Controversy between France and Spain on the one hand, and Great Britain on the other, which produced the War of 1755 between those Nations.

It is obvious that a claim to all the lands watered by a river and its tributaries, founded on the discovery and occupation of the mouth of the river, must conflict with a claim to all the inland territory as far as the line of watershed, founded on the discovery and occupation of an extent of sea-coast, about which latter position of Law there is no dispute amongst Nations. Such a claim is, in the second place, inconsistent with the position of Law, that the occupation de facto of one bank of a river and the river itself by one Nation, does not establish a Right of Possession over the opposite bank, so as to exclude another Na-

Conflict with acknowledged
Law.

²⁶ Camdeni Annales, anno 1580.

tion from settling upon it, if it should be vacant de facto. The doctrine of the United States Commissioners against which Great Britain considered it equally due to herself and to other Powers to enter her protest, may therefore be regarded as extravagant, since it derives no countenance from the Law of Nature, which regards rivers as appurtenant to land, and not land as adherent to rivers, and it cannot be admitted without derogating from established rules of Public Law acknowledged by all Nations.

Right of Settlement.

§ 128. Settlement, when it has supervened on Discovery, constitutes a perfect title, but a title by settlement when not combined with a title by discovery is in itself imperfect, and its immediate validity will depend upon one or other condition, that the right of discovery has been waived de jure by non-user, or that the right of occupancy has been renounced de facto by the abandonment of the territory. Acquisition by settlement is distinguished from acquisition by discovery and acquisition by occupancy in this respect, that no second discovery, no second occupancy can take place, whereas a series of settlements may have been successively made, and each of them in its turn abandoned, and the last settlement may, under given circumstances, constitute an exclusive title. Again, the presumption of Law will always be in favour of a title by settlement. "Commodum possidentis in eo est, quod etiam si ejus res non sit, qui possidet, si modo actor non potuerit suam esse probare, remanet suo loco possessio; propter quam causam, cum obscura sint utriusque jura, contra petito-rem judicari solet²⁷."

Where title by settlement is superadded to title by discovery, the Law of Nations will acknowledge the settlers to have a perfect title ; but where title by settlement is opposed to title by discovery, although no Convention can be appealed to in proof of the discovery having been waived, still, a tacit acquiescence on the part of the Nation, that asserts the discovery, during a reasonable lapse of time since the settlement has taken place, will bar its claim to disturb the settlement. Thus Mr. Wheaton writes :—"The constant and approved practice of Nations shows, that by whatever name it be called, the uninterrupted possession of territory or other property for a certain length of time by one State excludes the claim of every other, in the same manner as by the Law of Nations, and by the Municipal Code of every Civilised Nation, a similar possession by an individual excludes the claim of every other person to the article of property in question. This rule is founded upon the supposition, confirmed by constant experience, that every person will naturally seek to enjoy that which belongs to him ; and upon the inference, fairly to be drawn from his silence and neglect, of the original defect of his title, or of his intention to relinquish it²²."

²⁷ Justin. Institut. L. IV. Tit. 15. § 4.

Title by settlement, though originally imperfect, may be thus perfected by enjoyment during a reasonable lapse of time, the presumption of Law from undisturbed possession being, that there is no prior owner, because there is no claimant, and no better proprietary right, because there is no asserted right. The silence of other parties raises a presumption of their acquiescence, and their acquiescence raises a presumption of a defect of title on their part, or of an abandonment of their title. A title once abandoned, whether tacitly or expressly, cannot be resumed. "Celui qui abandonne une chose cesse d'en être le maître, et par conséquent une chose abandonnée devient une chose qui n'est à personne²⁹."

²² Elements of International Law, part II. c. iv. § 5.

Usucaption or Prescription.

§ 129. Title by settlement, then, as distinguished from title by discovery, when set up as a perfect title, resolves itself into title by usucaption or prescription. Wolff defines usucaption to be an acquisition of domain founded on a presumed desertion. Vattel³⁰ says it is the acquisition of domain founded on a long possession, uninterrupted and undisturbed, that is to say, an acquisition solely proved by this possession. Prescription, on the other hand, according to the same author, is the exclusion of all pretensions to a right, an exclusion founded on the length of time during which that right has been neglected, or, according to De Wolff's definition, it is the loss of an inherent right by virtue of a presumed consent. Vattel writing in French, and observing that the word usucaption was but little used in that language, made use of the word prescription, wherever there were no particular reasons for employing the other expression. The same remark may be applied in reference to our own language, and thus this title is generally spoken of as title by prescription. What lapse of time is requisite to found a valid title by prescription has not been definitely settled. The Law of Nature suggests no rule. Where, however, the claimant cannot allege undoubted ignorance on his part or on the part of those from whom he derives his right, or cannot justify his silence by lawful and substantial reasons, or has neglected his right for such a number of years as to allow the respective rights of the two parties to become doubtful, the presumption of abandonment will be established against him, and he will be excluded by ordinary prescription. Lapse of time, in the case equally of Nations as of individuals, robs the parties of the means of proof; so that if a bond fide possession were allowed to be questioned by those who have acquiesced for a long time in the enjoyment of a thing by the possessor of it, length of possession, instead of strengthening, would impair the title of the possessor: the inconvenience of such a result is so obvious, that the practice of Nations and individuals has equally repudiated it.

²⁹ Wolff, Institutions du Droit de la Nature et des Gens, § 23.

³⁰ Droit des Gens, L. II. c. 11. § 140.

§ 130. Thus in regard to the territory of the Hudson's Bay Company, it was alleged in the negotiations preliminary to the Treaty of Utrecht, that the French had acquiesced in the settlement of the Bay of Hudson by the Company incorporated by Charles II. in 1663, since M. Fontenac, the Governor of Canada, in his correspondence with Mr. Baily, who was Governor of the Factories in 1637, never complained, "for several years, of any pretended injury done to the French by the said Company's settling a trade, and building of forts at the bottom of the Bay³¹." The King of England, it is true, in his Charter had set forth the Title of the British Crown, as founded on discovery; the title by discovery, however, required to be perfected by settlement; and thus, in the negotiations, the subsidiary title by settlement was likewise set up by the British Commissioners, and the acquiescence of the French was alleged, either as a bar to their setting up any conflicting title by discovery, or as establishing the presumption of their having abandoned their asserted rights of discovery³².

Territory of the Hudson's Bay Company.

³¹ General Collection of Treaties, &c., London, 1710-33, vol. I. p. 446.

³² Twiss on The Oregon Question, p. 171.

Right of Contiguity.

§ 131. What extent of territory is de jure appendant to the settlement of a Nation in a given place by reason of Contiguity, must depend upon the circumstances of each case. It may sometimes be determined without difficulty by the geographical features of the Country, but in many cases it will be governed by considerations founded on the necessary uses of the settlers. The principle of Vicinitas, as applied in the Jurisprudence of Imperial Rome, has been admitted by the usage of Nations to control this question in the absence of special circumstances. Thus in the case of alluvial deposits, the Roman Jurists held that the possessor of the adjoining bank of a river had a proprietary title to them, and if an island were formed in the channel of the river, the possessor of the neighbouring bank had a right of property in it; on the other hand, if an island were formed in the mid-channel, it would be the common property of the owners of the two banks. Thus, “Quod per alluvionem agro nostro flumen adjecit, jure gentium nobis acquiritur”³³; again, “Insula nata in flumine, quod frequenter accidit, si quidem mediam partem fluminis tenet, communis est eorum, qui ab utraque parte fluminis prope ripam prædia possident, pro modo latitudinis cujusque fundi, quæ latitudo prope ripam sit; quod si alteri parti proximior est, eorum est tantum, qui ab ea parte prope ripam prædia possident”³⁴. A different practice in the case of Nations, whereby such newly formed lands should be open to the occupancy of the first comer, would manifestly be inconsistent with the security of the Nation, which had previously established itself on the adjoining or neighbouring bank. Upon the like considerations of security, islands which have been formed by the accumulation of mud and drift at the mouth of a river, and which keep sentinel as it were over the approaches to the mainland, are regarded as natural or necessary appendages of the Coast on which they border, and from which they are formed. "Consider," says Lord Stowell in the case of certain islands at the entrance of the River Mississippi, "what the consequences would be, if lands of this description were not considered as appendant to the mainland, and as comprised within the bounds of territory. If they do not belong to the United States of America, any other Power may occupy them, they might be embanked and fortified. What a thorn would this be in the side of America! It is physically possible at least, that they might be so occupied by European Nations, and then the command of the river would be no longer in America, but in such settlements. The possibility of such a consequence is enough to expose the fallacy of any arguments that are addressed to show, that these islands are not to be considered as part of the Territory of America³⁵."

³³ Dig., l. XL. t. 1. § 7.

³⁴ Inst. II. tit. 1. § 22.

§ 132. A title to Territory by reason of contiguity, Arcifinious States. (ratione vicinitatis), in the case of arcifinious States, so called according to Varro³⁶ because their territory admits of boundaries fit to keep the enemy out, (fines arcendis hostibus idoneos), in other words, of States whose territory admits of practical limits, such as rivers and mountains, is a reciprocal title. In such cases each State has an equality of right, so that the watershed-line or line of greatest elevation in the case

³⁵ The Anna, 3 Ch. Robinson's Rep. p. 385.

³⁶ Grotius adopts the derivation of Varro. His Commentator Barbeyrac approves the etymology given by Gronovius, namely, because such lands had no boundaries (fines) fixed and determined by any artificial measure. De Jure Belli et Pacis, L. II. c. 3. § 16.

of mountains, and the Thalweg or mid-channel, in the case of rivers, which corresponds to a line drawn along the lowest part of the bed of the river or the line of deepest depression, forms the juridical boundary between two such States. The practice of Nations has conformed to this principle in regard to territory which is not arcifinious, in cases where there is intermediate vacant land contiguous to the settlements of two nations. Each Nation has an equal title to extend its settlement over the intermediate vacant land, and thus it happens that the middle distance satisfies the juridical title, whilst it is the nearest approximation to a natural boundary, and the most convenient to determine. Thus the United States of America in their discussions with Spain respecting the Western boundary of Louisiana, contended that "whenever one European Nation makes a discovery, and takes possession of any portion of that Continent, (America,) and another afterwards does the same at some distance from it, when the boundary between them is not determined by the principle above mentioned, (namely, that when a Nation takes possession of an extent of sea-coast, it has a right of possession over the interior country coextensive with the waters of the rivers emptying within that coast,) the middle distance becomes such of course ³⁷."

So, in the case of a river, the opposite banks of which are possessed by different Nations, the Thalweg or mid-channel is the Normal water-boundary between them. Circumstances however may create exceptions, as, for instance, when the control of a district not actually reduced into the possession of a Nation, is necessary for its security, and is not essential to the security of the conterminous State. "No Nation," writes Vattel, "can lawfully appropriate to herself a too disproportionate extent of country, and reduce other Nations to want subsistence and a place of abode. A German Chief in the time of Nero said to the Romans, 'As Heaven belongs to the Gods, so the Earth is given to the human race, and desert countries are common to all³⁸,' giving those proud conquerors to understand that they had no right to reserve and appropriate to themselves a country which they left desert. The Romans had laid waste a chain of country along the Rhine, to cover their provinces from the incursions of the Barbarians. The remonstrance of the German Chief would have had a good foundation, had the Romans pretended to keep without reason a vast country which was of no use to them; but those lands which they would not suffer to be inhabited, serving as a rampart against foreign Nations, were of considerable use to the Empire³⁹."

³⁷ British and Foreign State Papers, 1817-18, p. 328.

§ 133. "There is another celebrated question," writes Vattel, "to which the discovery of the New World has given rise. It is asked whether a Nation may lawfully take possession of some part of a vast country in which there are none but erratic Nations, whose scanty population is incapable of occupying the whole. We have already observed in establishing the obligation to cultivate the Earth, that those Nations cannot exclusively appropriate to themselves more land than they have occasion for, or more than they are able to settle and cultivate. Their unsettled habitation in those immense regions cannot be accounted a true and legal possession, and the people of Europe too closely pent up at home, finding land of which the savages stood in no particular need, and of which they

Discovery
of the New World.

³⁸ Sicut cælum Diis, ita terras vacuæ, eas publicas esse. ³⁹ Droit des Gens, L. II. § 86.
generi mortalium datas; quæque made no actual or constant use, were lawfully entitled to take possession of it, and settle it with colonies. The Earth, as we have already observed, belongs to mankind in general, and was designed to furnish them with subsistence. If each Nation had from the beginning resolved to appropriate to itself a vast country, that the people might live only by hunting, fishing, and wild fruits, our Globe would not be sufficient to maintain a tenth part of its present inhabitants. We do not therefore deviate from the views of Nature in confining the Indians within narrow limits⁴⁰." Vattel has elsewhere observed, "Those who still pursue this idle mode of life, (namely, who to avoid labour choose to live by hunting and by their flocks,) usurp more extensive territory than with a reasonable share of labour they would have occasion for, and have therefore no reason to complain if other Nations, more industrious and more closely confined, come and take possession of part of those lands. Thus, though the conquest of the civilised empires of Peru and Mexico was a notorious usurpation, the establishment of many Colonies on the Continent of North America, might, on their confining themselves within just bounds, be extremely lawful. The people of those extensive tracts rather ranged through than inhabited them⁴¹."

Settlements in the New World.

§ 134. "On the discovery of this immense Continent," to quote the words of Chief Justice Marshall⁴², "the great Nations of Europe were eager to appropriate to themselves so much of it as they could respectively acquire. Its vast extent offered an ample field to the ambition and enterprise of all; and the character and religion of its inhabitants afforded an apology for considering them as a people over whom the superior Genius of Europe might claim an ascendancy. The Potentates of the Old World found no difficulty in convincing themselves that they made ample compensation to the inhabitants of the New World, by bestowing on them Civilisation and Christianity in exchange for Independence. But as they were all in pursuit of nearly the same object, it was necessary, in order to avoid conflicting settlements and consequent war with each other, to establish a principle, which all should acknowledge as the law by which the Right of Acquisition, which they all asserted, should be regulated as between themselves. This principle was, that Discovery gave title to the Government, by whose subjects or by whose authority it was made, against all other European Governments, which title might be consummated by possession. The exclusion of all other Europeans necessarily gave to the Nation, making the discovery, the sole right of acquiring the soil from the Natives and establishing settlements upon it. It was a right with which no Europeans could interfere. It was a right which all asserted for themselves, and to the assertion of which by others all assented. Those relations, which were to exist between the Discoverer and the Natives, were to be regulated by themselves. The Right thus acquired being exclusive, no other Power could interfere between them."

⁴⁰ Droit des Gens, L. I. § 209.

⁴¹ Ibid. § 81.

⁴² Johnson v. McIntosh. 8 Wheaton, p. 573.

"In the establishment of these relations, the Rights of the original Inhabitants were in no instance entirely disregarded, but were necessarily, to a considerable extent, impaired. They were admitted to be the rightful occupants of the soil, with a legal as well as a just claim to retain possession of it, and to use it according to their own discretion; but their Rights to complete Sovereignty, as Independent Nations, were necessarily diminished, and their power to dispose of the soil at their own will to whomsoever they pleased, was denied by the original fundamental principle, that discovery gave exclusive title to those who made it. While the different nations of Europe respected the Right of the Natives, as occupants, they asserted the ultimate dominion to be in themselves; and obtained and exercised, as a consequence of this ultimate dominion, a power to grant the soil, while yet in the possession of the Natives. These grants have been understood by all to convey a title to the grantees, subject only to the Indian Right of Occupancy."

Possessory
Right of Native Indians.

§ 135. The United States have consequently adhered to the customary rule amongst European Nations with regard to Territorial Title. "The title of the European Nations," says Chancellor Kent⁴³, "and which passed to the United States, to this immense Territorial Empire was founded on Discovery and Conquest; and by the European customary Law of Nations, prior discovery gave this title to the soil, subject to the Possessory Right of the Natives, and which occupancy was all the Right which European conquerors and discoverers, and which the United States, as succeeding to their title, would admit to reside in the native Indians. The principle is, that the Indians are to be considered merely as occupants, to be protected while in peace in the possession of their lands; but to be incapable of transferring the absolute title to any other than the Sovereign of the country, who has an exclusive right to extinguish the Indian title of occupancy either by purchase or by conquest."

§ 136. The question whether agriculturists and ⁴³ Commentaries on American Law, B. I. p. 258.

manufacturers have a right on abstract principles to expel shepherds from their pasture-grounds, or hunters from the territory over which they range in pursuit of game, or to contract the limits within which they shall exercise their avocations, has thus been discussed by Vattel ⁴⁴: "Families which wander in a country, as pastoral people, and which range through it as their wants require, possess it in common. It belongs to them, to the exclusion of all other Nations, and we cannot without injustice deprive them of the tracts of country of which they make use. But let us here recollect what we have said more than once ⁴⁵. The Savages of America had no right to appropriate all that vast Continent to themselves, and since they were unable to inhabit the whole of those regions, other Nations might, without injustice, settle in some parts of them, provided they left the Natives a sufficiency of land. If the pastoral Arabs would carefully cultivate the soil, a less space might be sufficient for them. Nevertheless no other Nation has a right to narrow their boundaries, unless it be under an absolute want of land. For in fact they possess their country; they make use of it after this manner; they reap from it an advantage suitable to their mode of life, respecting which they have no laws to receive from any one. In a case of pressing necessity, I think, people might without injustice settle in a part of that country, on teaching the Arabs the means of rendering it, by the cultivation of the Earth, sufficient for their own wants and those of the new inhabitants."

§ 137. This question has been treated with great lucidity and moderation in a judgment of Chief Jus-
The Indian Title.

⁴⁴ L. II. § 97.

⁴⁵ L. I. § 81. and § 209. L. II. § 86.

tic Marshall⁴⁶; "Although we do not mean to engage in the defence of those principles which Europeans have applied to Indian Title, they may, we think, find some excuse, if not justification, in the character and habits of the people whose rights have been wrested from them.

"The Title by Conquest is acquired and maintained by force. The conqueror prescribes its limits. Humanity, however, acting on public opinion, has established as a general rule, that the conquered shall not be wantonly oppressed, and that their condition shall remain as eligible as is compatible with the objects of the conquest. Most usually, they are incorporated with the victorious Nation, and become subjects or citizens of the government with which they are connected. The new and old members of the Society mingle with each other; the distinction between them is gradually lost, and they make one People. Where this incorporation is practicable, humanity demands, and a wise policy requires, that the rights of the conquered to property should remain unimpaired; that the new subjects should be governed as equitably as the old, and that confidence in their security should gradually banish the painful sense of being separated from their ancient connexions, and united by force to strangers.

"When the conquest is complete, and the conquered inhabitants can be blended with the conquerors, or safely governed as a distinct people, public opinion, which not even the conqueror can disregard, imposes these restraints upon him; and he cannot neglect them without injury to his fame, and hazard to his power.

⁴⁶ Johnson and Graham's lessee against McIntosh. 8 Wheaton, p. 589.

“But the tribes of Indians inhabiting this country were fierce savages, whose occupation was war, and whose subsistence was drawn chiefly from the forest. To leave them in possession of their country, was to leave the country a wilderness; to govern them as a distinct people was impossible, because they were as brave and high-spirited as they were fierce, and were ready to repel by arms every attempt on their Independence.

“What was the inevitable consequence of this state of things? The Europeans were under the necessity either of abandoning the country, and relinquishing their pompous claims to it, or of enforcing those claims by the sword; and by the adoption of principles adapted to the condition of a people with whom it was impossible to mix, and who could not be governed as a distinct Society; or of remaining in their neighbourhood, and exposing themselves and their families to the perpetual hazard of being massacred.

“Frequent and bloody wars in which the Whites were not always the aggressors, unavoidably ensued. European policy, numbers, and skill prevailed. As the white population advanced, that of the Indians necessarily receded. The country in the immediate neighbourhood of agriculturists became unfit for them. The game fled into thicker and more unbroken forests, and the Indians followed. The soil to which the Crown originally claimed title, being no longer occupied by its ancient inhabitants, was parcelled out according to the will of the Sovereign Power, and taken possession of by persons who claimed immediately from the Crown, or mediately, through its grantees or deputies.

“That Law which regulates, and ought to regulate

in general, the relations between the conqueror and conquered, was incapable of application to a people under such circumstances. The resort to some new and different rule, better adapted to the actual state of things, was unavoidable. Every rule which can be suggested will be found to be attended with great difficulty.

“However extravagant the pretension of converting the discovery of an inhabited country into conquest may appear ; if the principle has been asserted in the first instance, and afterwards sustained ; if a country has been acquired and held under it ; if the property of the great mass of the community originates in it, it becomes the Law of the Land, and cannot be questioned. So too, with respect to the concomitant principle, that the Indian inhabitants are to be considered merely as occupants, to be protected, indeed, while in peace, in the possession of their lands, but to be deemed incapable of transferring the absolute title to others. However this restriction may be opposed to Natural Right, and to the usages of Civilised Nations, yet if it be indispensable to that system under which the country has been settled, and be adapted to the actual condition of the two people, it may, perhaps, be supported by Reason, and certainly cannot be rejected by Courts of Justice.”

Derivative Acquisition.

§ 138. Derivative Acquisition as distinguished from Original Acquisition results from Indirect or Direct Cession. Indirect Cession takes place, when a Nation vanquished in war abandons a territory, and the Nation which has overrun it remains in possession of it. Direct Cession, on the other hand, is announced by some Act of a declaratory nature, whereby a Nation explicitly devolves its territorial rights to another Nation. The object of Direct Cession is sometimes to prevent a war, but most frequently to cement a peace. The repeated occurrence of such Direct Cessions in later times has led Jurists to make a distinction accordingly between Acts which place on record such Cessions, and Treaties properly so called. "The compacts," writes Vattel⁴⁷, "which have temporary matters for their object are called agreements, conventions, and pactions. They are accomplished by one single Act and not by repeated Acts. The compacts are perfected in their execution once for all; treaties receive a successive execution, whose duration equals that of the treaty." Martens⁴⁸ to the same purport writes, "On divise ensuite en général les traités en conventions transitaires, qui s'accomplissent d'un seul coup, et en traités proprement dits, qui obligent à des prestations successives, quoique dans la pratique on ne suive pas toujours cette distinction dans le choix des termes, dont on désigne les arrangemens faits entre les nations. Les traités de cession, de limites, d'échange, et ceux même qui constituent une servitude de droit public, ont la nature des conventions transitaires; les traités d'amitié, de commerce, de navigation, les alliances égales et inégales, ont celle des traités proprement dits (foedera). Les conventions transitaires sont perpétuelles par la nature des choses, de sorte qu'une fois accomplies, elles subsistent indépendamment des changemens survenus dans la personne du monarque, dans la forme du gouvernement, et même dans la Souveraineté de l'état contractant, tant qu'elles n'ont pas été mutuellement révoquées; une guerre même, survenue pour un autre motif, ne les fait pas tomber d'elles mêmes, quoiqu'elle autorise à en suspendre l'effet et quelquefois à les révoquer." To the same effect, Mr. Wheaton⁴⁹ says, "General Compacts between Nations may be divided into what are called transitory conventions and treaties properly so called. The first are perpetual in their nature, so that, being once carried into effect, they subsist independent of any change in the Sovereignty and form of Government of the Contracting Parties, and although their operation may in some cases be suspended during war, they revive on the return of peace without any express stipulation. Such are treaties of cession, boundary, or exchange of territory, or those which create a permanent servitude in favour of one Nation within the territory of another."

⁴⁷ L. II. § 163.

⁴⁸ Précis de Droit des Gens, § 58.

Title by Cession.

§ 139. In the case of Indirect Cession, which takes place by abandonment to an invading enemy, a confirmation of it is for the most part supplied by a subsequent treaty of peace concluded on the basis of "uti possidetis," whereby it is agreed that either Nation shall remain in possession of the territory which it has acquired during the war. But such Indirect Cession, although it remains incomplete during the war, seeing that there may be a change at any moment in the fortune of arms, does not require any such explicit confirmation in order to make it complete. If peace be concluded, without any stipulation for the restoration of territory on either side, the Nation, which has wrested during the war a town or a province from another Nation, acquires a lawful title to it by the conclusion of a treaty of peace with that Nation. The conclusion of the treaty of peace without reference to any restitutions is a tacit consent on the part of the Nation, from which a town or province has been wrested, that it should permanently remain in the hands of the conqueror; seeing that the worsted nation undertakes by concluding peace not to have recourse to force of arms for the recovery of its former possessions. "The effect of a treaty of peace," writes Vattel⁵⁰, "is to put an end to the war, and to abolish the subject of it. It leaves the Contracting Parties no right to commit any acts of hostility, on account either of the subject itself which had given rise to the war, or of anything that was done during its continuance; wherefore they cannot lawfully take up arms again for the same purpose." Title by Conquest thus resolves itself juridically into Title by Cession, and it is not the superior power of the conqueror which gives right to his conquest, but it is the consent of the conquered, which ultimately sanctions the conqueror's right of possession.

⁴⁹ Elements of International Law, Part II. c. 4. § 9.

⁵⁰ Lib. IV. c. 2. § 19. Grotius de Jure B. et P. L. III. c. 9. § 4. and c. 20. § 10.

CHAPTER IX.

RIGHTS OF POSSESSION.

The Territory of a Nation—Extension of Territory—Empire a primary Territorial Right—Empire distinct from Domain—Empire over things which cannot be appropriated—Empire over Territorial Rivers—Modification of Right of Empire by Compact—Empire over Frontier Rivers—Treaty Stipulations as to use of Frontier Rivers—Conventional Law of Europe as to Great Arterial Rivers—Treaties of Vienna, of Paris, and of Berlin—Treaty of London of 1883—The Thalweg or Midchannel the boundary of Conterminous States—Right of Alluvion—Prescriptive Rights over Rivers—The Stade or Brunshausen Toll.

The territory of a Nation.

§ 140. HAVING considered in the previous chapter the conditions under which a Nation may rightfully acquire possession of a country, we may proceed to consider the rights which a Nation may exercise by virtue of such possession; in other words, the jura possessionis, as distinguished from the jus possidendi. "When a Nation," writes Vattel¹, "takes possession of a country, it is considered as acquiring the empire or sovereignty over it at the same time with the domain². For since the Nation is Free and Independent, it cannot be its intention in settling in a country to leave to others the right to command, or any of those rights which constitute Sovereignty. The whole space over which a Nation extends its government becomes the seat of its jurisdiction, and is called its territory." To the same effect De Wolff writes, "*Si gens quædam regionem vacuum occupat, imperium in ea simul occupat*³."

¹ Droit des Gens, L. I. § 205.

quatenus ab imperio distinguitur.

² In his autem, quæ proprie nullius sunt, duo sunt occupabilia, imperium et dominium

Grotius de Jure B. et P. L. II. c. 3. § 4.

³ Jus Gentium, § 85.

§ 141. It is immaterial for the purposes of Empire as between Nations, whether a Nation acquires possession of a country by extending its political body coordinately, or by founding subordinate Political Bodies in the nature of Dependencies. Thus the Union of the North American States has extended itself over the North American Continent, by the admission of Coordinate States into the Union, on a footing of equality with the older and Sister States ; whereas the monarchical States of Europe have extended themselves by Colonisation or by founding new States in Dependence upon themselves as Parent States. The political peculiarities, which distinguish these different forms of National growth, as practised by the Nations of the New World and the Old World respectively, are notable ; but they are matters which concern the Internal organization of States, and have no necessary bearing upon their International relations. The founding of a new State in a condition of Political Dependence upon the Mother Country, constitutes as much an extension of a Nation's territory in regard to other Nations, as the incorporation of a new State into a National system of Coordinate States. In both cases the Nation consists of the aggregate body of States, and in the language of arithmeticians, the International Unit may be said to be a multiple political number, of which the component States are in the one case all whole numbers, and in the other case are one or more whole numbers and several fractions of a whole number.

Extension of Territory.

Accordingly, when a Nation takes possession of a distant country and settles a colony there, that Country, though separated from the principal establishment or Mother Country, naturally becomes a part of the State equally with its ancient possessions.

Whenever, therefore, the Political Laws or Treaties make no distinction between them, anything said of a Nation must also apply to its Colonies⁴.

Empire a primary territorial
right.

§ 142. The exercise of Empire as between Nations is thus an incident of territorial possession. Empire is in fact a primary territorial right, and the Empire of a Nation is supreme ratione loci over every person and every thing within its territory. "Quicquid est in territorio, est de territorio⁵." Its operation, however, is sometimes suspended by Comity or by Compact, but a claim of extra-territoriality, or of immunity from the Law of the territory (lex loci), is strictly exceptional; the general presumption of the Jus inter Gentes being adverse to it. There are cases however in which the Comity of Nations has suspended the exercise of certain rights of Empire (Jura imperii)⁶ so uniformly, that a Custom has grown up whereby the exception has acquired the character of Law; as for instance in regard to the immunity from the Lex Loci, which is extended to the Public Ministers of Foreign Princes, notwithstanding they should be permanently resident within the territory of another Nation, and thereby normally subject to its Empire.

Empire
distinct from dominion.

§ 143. The Right of Empire or Jurisdiction is distinguished from the Right of Dominion or Property. When a Nation takes possession of a vacant tract of land, it acquires under ordinary circumstances the Dominion or fullest Right of Property over it concurrently with the Right of Empire. "Si gens regionem quamdam occupavit, omnis terra et quæ in ea ⁴ Vattel, L. I. § 210.

⁵ Heffter, § 67.

⁶ Dominus territorii non permittere intelligitur peregrinis, ut in territorio suo versentur, vel ibidem commorentur, nisi sub hac conditione ut legibus loci subsint eorum actiones. Wolffii

Jus Gentium, § 299. Grotius, L. II. c. 11. § 2.

sint, in dominio ipsius sunt⁷." This Right of Dominion or Property gives to a Nation a right to exclude all other Nations from the enjoyment of the territory of which it has taken possession, and its Right of Empire warrants a Nation to enforce its own sanctions against all who would intrude upon its territory. Although, however, the Right of Empire accompanies the Right of Property in the case of International Possession, they are not necessarily concurrent rights⁸, but the Right of Empire may be enjoyed by a Nation over certain things, in which it is incapable of acquiring an absolute Right of Property. "Acquiri imperium potest, etsi res singulæ naturâ in dominium venire non possunt⁹."

§ 144. The Roman Jurists regarded certain things as incapable by nature of being appropriated. "Et quidem naturali Jure communia sunt omnium hæc, aer, aqua profluens, et mare, et per hoc litora maris¹⁰." Empire over things which cannot be appropriated.

It is obvious that the air, running water, and the sea, are not susceptible of detention, and consequently cannot be physically reduced into possession, so as to give rise to that permanent relation, which is implied in the Juridical notion of property. "Again Nature does not give to man a right of appropriating to himself things which may be innocently used, and which are inexhaustible and sufficient for all. For since those things, while common to all, are sufficient to supply the wants of each, whoever should, to the exclusion of all other participants, attempt to render himself sole proprietor of them, would unreasonably seek to wrest the bounteous gifts of Nature from the ⁷ Wolff, Jus Gentium, § 274.

⁸ Gunther, L. II. § 17.

⁹ Quamquam autem plerumque uno actu quæri solent impe-rium et dominium, sunt autem distincta. Grotius, L. II. c. 3.

§ 4. 2.

¹⁰ Just. Inst. L. II. Tit. I. § 1.

parties excluded¹¹. There is accordingly no warrant of Natural Law for an absolute Right of Property in the running water of rivers (aqua perennis) any more than in the tidal water of the sea. But if the free and common use of a thing of this nature (namely which is of itself inexhaustible) be prejudicial or dangerous to a Nation, the care of its own safety will entitle it so far, and so far only, to control the use of it by others, as to secure that no prejudice or danger result to itself from their use of it. A Nation may accordingly have a Right of Empire over things which are nevertheless by nature communis usus, and over which it cannot acquire an absolute Right of Property; as, for instance, over portions of the High Seas, or over rivers which form the boundary of its territory. The limits, within which the safety of a Nation warrants such an exercise of Empire, will be considered hereafter.

Empire
over Territorial Rivers.

§ 145. A river, of which both banks are in the possession of one and the same Nation, may be regarded as a stream of water contained in a certain channel, which channel forms part of the territory of the Nation¹². Such water accordingly, whilst passing through the territory of a Nation, is subject, like all other things within its territory, to the Empire of the Nation, and those who navigate upon it are subject to the Jurisdiction of the Nation ratione loci. The exercise of the Right of Empire over such a river by a Nation, whilst it flows through its territory, does not in any wise militate against the use of it as running water by other Nations, or conflict with the exercise of their corresponding Right of Empire over it, whilst it flows through their respective territories. We find accordingly by the practice of Nations, that a Nation having physical possession of both banks of a river is held to be in juridical possession of the stream of water contained within its banks, and may rightfully exclude at its pleasure every other Nation from the use of the stream, whilst it is passing through its territory, and this rule of Positive Law holds good whatever may be the breadth of a river. Moreover, the fact, that other Nations have freely navigated the stream before both banks of a river have come into possession of one and the same Nation, will not control the operation of this rule. Thus the recognition of the Independence of the Seven United Provinces by the peace of Munster on the part of Spain¹³ (Jan. 30, 1648) carried with it the recognition of their right to close the navigation of the River Scheldt in all its branches within their territory. The same rule was applied to the stream of the Mississippi, below the point where the Southern Boundary of the United States struck that river, by Spain, after the Spanish Nation had acquired possession of both banks, although the navigation of the entire river had been previously common to all Nations whilst it formed a common Boundary of the French and British Possessions. The United States of North America contested at first the claim of Spain, but were fain to conclude the dispute by the Convention of San Lorenzo el Real¹⁴, under which the free navigation of the entire river was conceded by Spain to citizens of the United States in common with subjects of Spain. At a subsequent period after Louisiana and Florida had been ceded to the United States, the entire river became included within the Territory of the North ¹³ Schmauss, Corp. Jur. Gent. I. p. 618.

¹¹ Vattel, L. I. § 280.

¹² Grotius de Jur. B. et P., L. II. c. 14. § 7.

¹⁴ Martens, Recueil, VI. p. 146.

American Union; the United States have thereupon asserted in their turn their Right of Exclusive Use over the entire stream, and have, in virtue of their Right of Possession, prohibited all other Nations from the navigation of any portion of the river. In a similar manner Great Britain maintains her exclusive right over the stream of the St. Lawrence during its passage through British Territory. By the Treaty, however, of Washington ¹³ (5 June, 1854), Great Britain has agreed, that the citizens and inhabitants of the United States shall have the right of navigating the river St. Lawrence and the canals in Canada used as the means of communication between the great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean, as fully and freely as the subjects of her Britannic Majesty, it being understood, however, that the British Government retains the right of suspending this privilege on giving due notice thereof to the Government of the United States.

It may be observed in regard to this Right of Exclusive Use, which a Nation being in possession of both banks exercises over the stream of a navigable river, that a Nation so established has a physical power of constantly acting upon the stream, and of excluding at its pleasure the action of any other Nation, which power constitutes Juridical Possession. On the other hand the stream, whilst it is included within the territory of a Nation, cannot be considered to be destined by the Creator to continue open to the common use of mankind any more than the banks and adjacent lands, which have been appropriated and so withdrawn from common use. Nature would thus appear to have interposed neither a material obstacle nor a moral impediment to the exclusive use of a navigable river on the part of a Nation within certain territorial limits. That a river, whilst it flows through the territory of a Nation, should be regarded in any other light than as part of its Possessions, would seem to be inconsistent with the integrity of its territory, whilst it might be incompatible with its security, if the use of the river were not subject to its exclusive control.

¹³ Martens, N. R. Gén. Tom. XVI. p. 502. This Convention is to remain in force for ten years, and further, until the expiration of twelve months after either Nation shall give notice to the other of its wish to terminate the same.

§ 146. The exercise on the part of a Nation of its right to exclude other Nations from the use of its territorial waters has often been modified either expressly or implicitly by Compact. ^{Modifications by Compact.} Thus Spain, being in possession of both banks of the river Mississippi for some distance upwards from the sea, conceded to the citizens of the United States by the Treaty of San Lorenzo el Real, (anno 1795,) the free navigation of the river, from its source to its mouth, reserving however the power to extend the same privileges to the subjects of other Powers by a Special Convention. In a similar manner it was agreed between Great Britain and the United States by the Eighth Article of the Treaty of Paris (17th Sept. 1783)¹⁴, "that the navigation of the river Mississippi, from its source to the Ocean, should for ever remain free and open to the subjects of Great Britain and the citizens of the United States." "The subsequent acquisition," writes Wheaton, "of Louisiana and Florida by the United States having included within their territory the whole river from its source to the Gulf of Mexico, and the stipulation in the Treaty of 1783, securing to British subjects a right to participate in its navigation, not having been renewed by the Treaty of Ghent.

¹⁴ Martens, Recueil, III. p. 559.

in 1814, the right of navigating the Mississippi is now vested exclusively in the United States ¹⁵."

Empire
over Frontier Rivers.

§ 147. A Nation which has established itself on one of the banks of a river, prior to the occupation of the opposite bank by any other Nation, may, with a view to its own security, reduce the channel of the river into possession without occupying the other bank ¹⁶. It may for this purpose either station an armed fleet upon its waters, and thereby occupy the fairway of the river, or it may erect armed forts upon its own bank, and thereby command the fairway, and in either case it will be able effectively to exclude other Nations from the use of the river. Thus the Romans became sole masters of the Rhine, the Danube, and some other rivers, because the barbarians who inhabited on the other bank having no boats, the Romans constantly kept what they called "naves lusoriæ" upon them. So likewise the Republic of Paraguay in South America has established its possession of the channel of the river Paraguay which separates the territory of Paraguay from El Gran Chaco ¹⁷, and the Republic of Paraguay claims by right of established possession to exclude not merely the Indians of El Gran Chaco who inhabit the opposite bank, but Nations of European origin, such as the Brazilian Nation which possesses the upper part of the river, and the Argentine Confederation which is in possession of the lower part of the river, from navigat-

¹⁵ Wheaton's Elements, Part II. c. 4. § 18.

¹⁶ Wolfii Jus Gentium, § 106. Vattel, Droit des Gens, L. I. § 266.

¹⁷ The Indians of the Chaco have no canoes. The river throughout the extent of Paraguay is occupied by a river-police stationed by the government of Paraguay on board of guardias and piquetes, each occupied by from six to twelve men. La Plata and the Argentine Confederation and Paraguay, by Thomas J. Page, U. S. N. London, 1859, p. 108.

ing that portion of the river which separates the Republic of Paraguay from the territory of the warlike Chaco tribes¹⁸. That a Nation which is settled on one of the banks of a river may nevertheless have a Right of Empire over the entire river, is thus noticed by Grotius. "But though, as I have said in case of any doubt, the jurisdictions on each side reach to the middle of the river that runs between them, yet it may be, and in some places it has actually happened that the river belongs wholly to one party, because the other Nation had not yet possessed the other bank till later, when their neighbours were already in possession of the whole river, or else because matters were so stipulated by some treaty¹⁹." The sanction, which Usucaption or established possession in such a case gives to the claim of a Nation to exclude other Nations from the use of a river, has not been overlooked by Vattel: "A long and undisputed possession establishes the Right of a Nation, otherwise there could be no peace, no stability between them, and notorious facts must be admitted to prove Possession. Thus, when from time immemorial a Nation has without contradiction exercised the Sovereignty upon a river which forms its boundary, nobody can dispute with that Nation the supreme dominion over it²⁰."

§ 148. Grotius has remarked that a Riverain State may have jurisdiction over the entire channel of a river, to the exclusion of other Riverain States, "because matters have been so stipulated by some Treaty." A remarkable instance of this occurs in the Treaty of Treaty Stipulations as to Frontier Rivers.

¹⁸ The warlike Chaco tribes have alone, amid the degradation of the native races upon the American Continent, defied for more than three centuries the power of the white man.

¹⁹ De Jure B. et P., L. II. c. 3.

§ 18.

²⁰ Droit des Gens, L. I. § 166.

St. Germain en Lay (29 March, 1679), whereby the King of Sweden ceded to the Elector of Brandenburg all his possessions on the right bank of the Oder, retaining his possession of the left bank, and whereby it was further expressly provided, that the river Oder itself should for ever remain under the Sovereignty of the Crown of Sweden, and that the Elector of Brandenburg should not erect any fortifications upon the bank ceded to him²⁰. This exceptional arrangement had its origin most probably in the previous dispositions of the Treaty of Westphalia, by which the Sovereignty of the Crown of Sweden over the river Oder was secured for ever, and with which, as forming part of the Public Conventional Law of Europe, the Treaty of St. Germain en Lay was made to accord.

Treaties, whereby a river has been ceded in its entirety (en entier), have been held to transfer not only the possession of the entire channel of the river, but both its banks as inseparable accessories to the river. Thus by the Treaty of Warsaw (18 Sept. 1773), Poland agreed that the entire river Netze should belong to Prussia, and Prussia contended, and was ultimately successful in her contention, that the cession of the entire river implied the cession of the stream and both its banks. By a like interpretation, Sweden having obtained under the Treaty of Osnabruck (24 Oct. 1648) the cession of the entire river Oder from the Emperor of Germany, was held to have acquired thereby possession of a margin of two German miles on the further bank, as an inseparable accessory to

²⁰ La rivière de l'Oder, suivant les dispositions des traités de Westphalie, demeurera toujours en souveraineté au Roi et à la couronne de Suède, et il ne sera pas libre au dit Electeur de Brandenbourg d'ériger aucune forteresse ou de fortifier aucune place dans l'entrevue du Pays qui lui est cédé par le présent Traité.—Dumont, Corps Diplomatique, XIII. p. 408.

the stream. To what extent the use of the land on the bank or banks of a river may be regarded as accessory to the use of the stream, has been a subject of dispute. Prussia, in her dispute with Poland respecting the effect of her cession of the river Netze en entier, went so far as to claim all such portions of the opposite bank as the waters of the river in a state of inundation overflowed, as well as the marshes caused by such inundations, which claim Gunther²¹ considers to have been in conformity with usage.

It is obvious however that such a principle, if generally applied, might lead to great complications. A different and a more definite principle was adopted by Russia in the Treaty of Adrianople concluded with the Ottoman Porte²² (24 Sept. 1829). By this Treaty, the Porte in effect ceded the river Danube between the Pruth and the Black Sea in its entirety to Russia, for it was provided by Article III, that the frontier line should follow the course of the Danube from the confluence of the Pruth to the St. George's mouth, leaving all the Islands in possession of Russia, and the right bank of the Danube in possession, as heretofore, of the Porte. But it was further agreed that from the point where the St. George's branch separated from the Sulina branch of the Danube, the right bank of the river should remain uninhabited for the distance of two hours²³, and that no establishment of any kind should be formed upon it within that limit. Such a provision, whilst it effectively secured the navigation of the river from any control on the part of the Porte by virtue of its possession of the southern bank of the Danube, did not tend in any way to impair the ²¹ Gunther, t. II. § 14.

²² Martens, N. R., t. VIII. p. 144.

²³ 'Deux heures,' probably about two German miles, 'Zwei Stünde.'

integrity of the Porte's possession of that bank. On the other hand, the rule of interpretation, whereby the cession of a river en entier implies the cession of both its banks, as contended for by Prussia in the case of the river Netze, might operate to deprive a Nation of an important land-frontier, although it has in terms only ceded possession of a water-frontier.

Conventional Law
as to the great rivers of Europe.

§ 149. It was formerly the policy of Nations to consider rivers, equally with mountains, to be natural barriers, and to regard them as turned to the most useful purpose when employed as lines of international demarcation. Thus Grotius, borrowing a term of Law from the Civilians, writes, "But in any doubt of the bounds of a State, those lands that reach to some river are to be reckoned as arcifinious, because nothing is so proper to distinguish jurisdiction as that which is of such a nature that it is not easily passed over²⁴." The exclusive right to the use of a river has been accordingly maintained with great jealousy by Nations, as an important international right, seeing that a river might under such circumstances be converted into a fortified frontier. The Conventional Law of Europe has, in modern times, been adapted to larger and less selfish views. Thus the great navigable rivers of the Continent, which in their passage to the Ocean intersect various lands, sometimes passing through Territory in the exclusive possession of one and the same Nation, at another time forming a common boundary between the Territories of two or more Nations, and of which the navigation has been heretofore in some parts totally impeded, and in others so burdened with tolls, that they had ceased to be available as highways of general commerce, are now regarded as the instruments of Nature to cement the peaceful relations of mankind, by facilitating their mutual intercourse. It was one of the most beneficent arrangements of the Congress of Vienna, that the Powers there assembled agreed, that the navigable rivers which traversed or separated their respective States, should be open for commercial purposes to the navigation of vessels of all Nations, from the places where they became navigable to their mouths, subject to an uniform system of police and tolls, to be settled by common accord²⁵. The Treaty of Paris (30 March, 1856) has applied to the river Danube and its mouths the same principles of Law which had been applied by the Christian Powers assembled at Vienna in 1815 to the rivers traversing or separating their respective territories, and has recorded that this arrangement with the Ottoman Porte forms part of the Public Law of Europe. The Right of Empire over any of the great arterial Rivers of Europe has thus ceased to confer any exclusive privilege of navigation upon the Nation which enjoys that Right. On the contrary, each Riverain State is under a Conventional obligation to remove all obstacles to navigation, which may arise in the bed of the river within its Territory, and to maintain the banks and towing-paths and other accessories to the navigation in such a condition as will best facilitate the circulation of the merchant vessels of all Nations.

²⁴ De Jure B. et P., L. II. c. 3. § 17. 2.

§ 150. A different system, however, was adopted under the Treaty of Paris for removing the physical obstacles to the Free Navigation of the Danube. An European Commission was appointed under Article XVI of that Treaty, in which Austria, France, Great Britain, Prussia, Russia, Sardinia, and Turkey were each represented by one delegate. The business of this Commission was to designate and to cause to be executed the works necessary below Isaktcha, to clear the mouths of the Danube, as well as the neighbouring parts of the Sea, from the sand and other impediments obstructing their navigation, and for the purpose of defraying the expenses of such works and of the establishments ancillary to them, power was given to this Commission to fix dues of a suitable rate leviable on the flags of all nations under conditions of perfect equality. Further, under Article XVII of the same Treaty, a Riverain Commission was to be appointed, in which Austria, Bavaria, the Ottoman Porte, and Wurtemberg were each to be represented by one delegate, with whom was to be associated a Commissioner from each of the Danubian Principalities, whose nomination was to be approved by the Porte. This Riverain Commission was intended to be permanent, and its functions were to be: 1. To prepare regulations of navigation and of river-police. 2. To remove impediments, of whatever nature they might be, which might still prevent the application to the Danube of the principles of law sanctioned by the Treaty of Vienna. 3. To order and to cause to be executed the necessary works throughout the whole course of the River. 4. After the dissolution of the European Commission to maintain the mouths of the Danube and the neighbouring parts of the Sea in a navigable condition. The next following, Article XVIII, placed on record an understanding amongst the Signatory Powers that the European Commission would have finished its task, and the Riverain Commission would have completed the works described in Article XVII within a period of two years, whereupon the Signatory Powers having been assembled in Congress, and having been informed of that fact, after having placed it on record, were to pronounce the dissolution of the European Commission and thenceforth the permanent Riverain Commission was to enjoy the same powers which the European Commission had up to that time exercised. In pursuance of the provisions of Article XVII already mentioned, Delegates of the Four Riparian Powers, to wit, Austria, Bavaria, Turkey, and Wurtemberg, with whom were associated a Commissioner from each of the Danubian Principalities, to wit, Moldavia, Servia, and Walachia, assembled at Vienna, with a view to give effect on their part to the provisions of the Treaty of Paris; and with that object they executed an Act of Navigation on 7 November, 1857²⁶, under which, amongst other matters, the navigation of the Danube from the place where the river first becomes navigable down to the Black Sea was declared to be entirely free to the merchant vessels of all Nations, subject however to regulations of river-police. This Act, however, remained inoperative until 8th March, 1866, when it underwent a slight modification embodied in two Annexes, and was thereupon approved by the Signatory Powers of the Treaty of Paris²⁷, assembled in Conference.

²⁵ Martens, N. R. II. p. 428.

§ 151. It had been contemplated by the Signatory Powers of the Treaty of Paris of 1856, as above mentioned, that the duties of the European Commission of the Danube would have been completed before the expiration of two years, and that the Riverain Commission would by that time have replaced it. The engineering difficulties, however, and the expenses of the task imposed upon the European Commission proved to be much greater than had been anticipated, and after the Signatory Powers of the Treaty of Paris had consented in 1871 to release Russia from her treaty-engagements in respect of the neutralisation of the Black Sea, they agreed to prolong the action of the European Commission for twelve years, that is to say, to 24 April, 1883, and with regard to the Riverain Commission, it was not to be assembled without a previous understanding amongst the Riparian States. The subsequent war between Russia and the Porte gave rise to new territorial arrangements on the banks of the Danube. Under Article LII of the Treaty of Berlin of 1878, all the fortresses on the banks of the Danube, from the Iron Gates to the Sea, were to be rased to the ground, and no armed vessel was to navigate the Danube below the Iron Gates with the exception of light vessels for the purposes of river-police and the levying of custom-dues. The waters of the Lower Danube, that is of the River below the Iron Gates, were thus neutralized in the sense in which that word has been applied by the negotiators of the Treaty of Paris to the waters of the Black Sea. Two light-armed vessels, however, which each of the Signatory Powers was entitled under that Treaty to keep at the mouths of the Danube, were to be allowed to ascend the river from time to time as high up as Galatz. The European Commission of the Danube, in which Roumania was henceforth entitled to be represented (Article LIII), was to continue to exercise its functions as far up as Galatz in complete independence of every territorial authority, and it was authorised in conjunction with delegates from the Riparian States to make regulations for the navigation of the River from Galatz up to the Iron Gates, which were to be in harmony with those already made and applied to the River below Galatz down to the Sea. The European Commission was also authorised to take measures to secure that a lighthouse should be maintained on the Isle of Serpents opposite the Delta of the Kilia branch of the Danube. Further, the execution of the works necessary to remove the obstacles to the safe navigation of the Danube above the Iron Gates was entrusted to Austria-Hungary, and the expenses of such removal were to be defrayed by a provisional tax to be approved by the European Commission. It need not be matter of surprise that it should have been found to be a work of much time and difficulty to carry into effect the provisions of the Treaty of Paris for opening to all Nations the Navigation of the Danube, when it is borne in mind that the provision of the final Act of the Congress of Vienna of 1820, declaring the navigation of the Rhine to be free from the point where it became navigable unto the Sea, did not obtain full effect before 1831, when the Government of the Netherlands agreed, by a Convention concluded at Mayence²⁸ on the 31st March of that year between all the Riparian Powers, to allow to the vessels of commerce of all nations the liberty of passing through the waters of the Leck and the Waal, with a further provision that in case the passages to the main sea by those two outlets of the Rhine should at any time

²⁶ British and Foreign State Papers, vol. lvii. p. 786.

²⁷ Ibid., vol. lvii. p. 546.

²⁸ The Government of the Netherlands could not concur in the interpretation given by the other Signatory Powers of the Final Act to the words "jusqu'à la mer." The Convention of Mayence agreed to replace these words by the phrase "jusque dans la mer," bis an die See. Martens, N. R. IX. 252.

become unnavigable, other water-channels equally convenient should be declared open to the navigation of vessels of commerce. The same Convention regulated the charges to be made on vessels and merchandise passing through Dutch waters, and also the tolls payable at the different ports of the Riparian States of the Upper Rhine. It will thus be seen that the free navigation of the great arterial Rivers, separating or traversing the territory of the different States of Europe, has been placed under the Ægis of the European Concert of Public Law. This principle was affirmed for the first time at the Congress of Vienna in 1815. It was re-affirmed at the Congress of Paris in 1856, when the Ottoman Empire was admitted into the European Concert. It has been for a third time affirmed at the Congress of Berlin in 1878, when Servia and Roumania were admitted into the Family of Nations, and when Roumania was declared to be entitled to succeed to the rights and obligations of the Ottoman Porte in respect of the territory on the southern bank of the Danube ceded to her as an independent State. Further, by the same Treaty the European Commission of the Danube, in which Roumania was to be represented, was maintained in the exercise of its functions as high up the river as Galatz independent of every territorial authority. By a subsequent arrangement of the Conference of London, embodied in a Treaty of 10 March, 1883, the powers of the European Commission of the Danube have been prolonged for twenty-one years from 24 April, 1883, and its jurisdiction has been extended from Galatz to Ibraila²⁹. "At the expiration of the above-mentioned period the powers of the European Commission are to continue in force by tacit prolongation for successive terms of three years, unless one of the High Contracting Parties should notify one year before the expiration of one of those terms of three years the intention of proposing modifications in the Constitution or in the powers of the Commission." This latter provision of the Treaty seems to have been rather inconveniently worded, as it might appear under one interpretation of it to authorise any one of the High Contracting Parties to terminate the tacit prolongation of the European Commission at its pleasure by giving notice of a modification of it, but it may be presumed that the other High Contracting Parties will assert their right, if they should reject any such proposed modification in the Constitution or the Powers of the Commission, to prolong its existence toties quoties.

²⁹ Parliamentary Paper, Danube, No. 2 (1883). Mémorial Diplomatique, 19 Mars, 1883.

§ 152. The work of adjusting the navigation of the Danube and its Mouths to the principles of law established by the Congress of Vienna of 1815, as applicable to Rivers which separate or traverse different States, is still incomplete, notwithstanding that the Riverain Commission commenced its labours promptly, and agreed as already mentioned to an Act of Navigation on 7 Nov. 1857, which was to come into operation 1 Jan. 1858. The European Commission, on the other hand, has not been idle. Its work was reviewed in 1865, and was approved by a Public Act of the Signatory Powers of the Treaty of Paris of 1856, signed at Galatz on 2 Nov. 1865. An additional Act, to which Roumania was made a party, has been recently signed at Galatz on 28th May, 1881, extending the Powers of the European Commission as high up as Galatz, in order to meet the territorial changes established by the Treaty of Berlin of 13 July, 1878. Still more recently the powers of the European Commission have been extended to Ibraila, whilst the portions of the Kilia branch of the Danube, where both banks belong to one and the same Power, have been withdrawn from its control, the other portions being still made subject to the Regulations in vigour in the Soulina branch, under the superintendence of the Russian and Roumanian members of the European Commission. The Treaty of London of 1883, to which the Signatory Powers of the Treaty of Berlin are parties, has sanctioned certain Regulations for the navigation and river-police, applicable to that part of the Danube which is situated between the Iron Gates and Ibraila. Further, it has placed the execution of those Regulations in the hands of a "Mixed Commission of the Danube," in which Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria, Roumania, and Servia are to be represented each by one Delegate, and a member of the European Commission, designated for a period of six months, according to the alphabetical order of the States, is also to take part in the deliberations of the Commission with all the rights enjoyed by the other Delegates. The Powers of this Mixed Commission of the Danube are to be of equal duration with those of the European Commission. It will thus be seen that the navigation of the Danube is placed under three distinct systems of law. The Mouths of the River and the Lower portion of it as high up as Ibraila are under the Control of the European Commission including Roumania, subject to a modification of its powers in certain portions of the Kilia branch. The Middle Danube, which includes the waters above Ibraila, as far as the Iron Gates, will be under the Mixed Commission of the Danube, over which the Presidency is assigned by the Treaty of London, 1883, to the Delegate of Austria-Hungary, and its Sittings are to be held at Giurgevo twice in each year. The Upper Danube, on the other hand, above the Iron Gates and the Cataracts, will be under the superintendence of the Riverain States in accordance with the general Principles of the Public Law of Europe, the freedom of its navigation, however, being assured to the Flags of all Nations.

§ 153. If the opposite banks of a navigable river are in the possession of two Nations, and neither Nation can prove that itself, or the Nation from which it may have derived its title, was established on the one bank prior to the occupation of the other bank by the other Nation, each will have a Right of Empire and Dominion over the river as far as the mid-channel or Thalweg. “Pour ce qui est des fleuves et lacs frontières, dont la rive opposée est également occupée, leur milieu, y compris les îles que traverse la ligne du milieu, sépare ordinairement les territoires. Au lieu de cette ligne on a nouvellement choisi pour frontière le Thalweg, c’est à dire le chemin variable que prennent les bateliers, quand ils vont aval, ou plutôt le milieu de ce chemin ³⁰.” Grotius and Vattel speak of the middle of the river as the line of demarcation ³¹ between two jurisdictions, but modern publicists and statesmen prefer the more accurate and more equitable boundary of the Midchannel. If there be more than one channel of a river, the deepest channel is the Midchannel for the purposes of territorial demarcation ; and the boundary line will be the line drawn along the surface of the stream corresponding to the line of deepest depression of its bed. Thus we find in the Treaty of Argovie, (17 Sept. 1808,) concluded between the Grand Duchy of Baden and the Helvetic Canton of Argovie³², that the Thalweg, or water-frontier line, is defined to be "the line drawn along the greatest depth of the stream," and as far as bridges are concerned, "the line across the middle of each bridge." The islands on either side of the Midchannel are regarded as appendages to either bank³³; and if they have once been taken possession of by the Nation to whose bank they are appendant, a change in the Midchannel of the river will not operate to deprive that Nation of its possession, although the water-frontier line will follow the changes of the Midchannel—"Dans les fleuves navigables, c'est le courant du fleuve qu'on a communément en vue, en convenant de prendre le milieu pour limite. Cette limite change donc, si le courant change: ce qui cependant n'influe pas sur la propriété des autres parties une fois acquise. Mais dans le cas où un fleuve changerait totalement le lit, le lit desséché resterait partagé entre les deux nations, comme l'était le fleuve. Les simples atterrissemens n'altèrent pas la ligne, qui sert de limite³⁴." "A river," writes Grotius, "that separates two Empires is not to be considered barely as water, but as water confined within such and such ³² Martens, N. R. T. I. p. 140.

The Thalweg or Midchannel of a River the Boundary of Contiguous States.

³⁰ Klüber, Droit des Gens, § 133.

³¹ Grotius, L. II. c. 3. § 18. Vattel, L. c. 22. § 266.

³³ Such is the general law, but by treaty the midchannel may be made the water-boundary, yet all the islands in the river belong to one Power. Thus by the Convention of 9 Feb. 1776, between the King of Poland and the Empress Maria Theresa, all the islands in the river Vistula, within the limits of the Convention, with the exception of that in which the town of Casimir is situated, were ceded to her Imperial and Royal Majesty, whilst half the bed of the river was declared to belong to each Power. Martens, Recueil, T. II. p. 127.

³⁴ Martens, Précis du Droit des Gens, § 39.

banks and running in such and such a channel; therefore the addition, subtraction, or such changes of its particles, as allow the whole to subsist in its ancient form, allow the river to be considered as the same. But if the form of the whole be changed at once, it will be quite another thing; and consequently, if a river is dammed up above, and a passage made to convey the water another way, the river ceases to be. So in case a river should force its way through some unusual passage, and entirely forsake its former channel, it is no longer the river that it was before, but a new river. So, too, if a river should have become dried up, the middle of the channel would remain, as before, the boundary of Empire between two Nations, because the intention of each Nation must be presumed to take the river for the natural limit of their lands, but if the river should at any time cease to be, then to possess respectively what they had before: the same rule is to be observed if the channel should be changed²⁵."

§ 154. When a river is the boundary between two Nations, whether its channel remains common to the inhabitants of either bank, or whether each Nation possesses half of it, the respective rights of the two Nations are not in any wise changed by alluvion, that is by a gradual addition of soil made by the current of the river to the bank on either side²⁶. If therefore it happens that by the natural effect of the current, one of the two banks receives an increase of soil, while the river gradually encroaches on the opposite bank, the river still remains as heretofore the boundary between the two Nations, and notwithstanding the progressive changes in its course,

Right of Alluvion.

²⁵ De Jure B. et P., L. II. c. 3. § 17.

²⁶ Grotius, L. II. c. 3. § 16. Vattel, L. I. § 268, 269.

each retains over it the same rights as heretofore. So that, if for instance its possession be equally divided between the owners of the opposite banks, the midchannel, or Thalweg, although its distance from the respective banks may be no longer the same by reason of the alluvial increase of the one bank and the denudation of the other bank, continues nevertheless to form the line of demarcation between the two Nations.

Prescriptive Rights over Rivera.

§ 155. A river may belong to one Nation and another Nation may have an incontestable right to navigate it, in which case the former cannot erect upon the river any work, which will entirely interrupt and render it unfit for navigation. The right to navigate such a river may have been acquired by the Nation, which is not in possession of the river, either by prescription founded on the long acquiescence of the other Nation, if it ever had the right to exclude other Nations from the navigation, or by a privilege granted by a common paramount Sovereign. It may happen, that conterminous Independent States, separated by a river, have been subject in former times to a common paramount Lord or Sovereign, such for instance as the Princes and Free Cities of Germany formerly recognised in the Roman Emperor of the Germans, who in virtue of his Supremacy could rightfully grant to them by Charter or otherwise the exercise of dominion and jurisdiction over a river within the Empire. Thus a Right of *Condominium*³⁷ over the Rhine was granted by the Roman Emperor of the Germans to the Electors of Mayence, Trèves, Cologne, and the Elector Palatine, and a Right of Supreme Dominion over the Maine was similarly granted to the Elector of Mayence. In an analogous manner the right of levying tolls, which was an Imperial Right, was granted to Riverain States of the Empire, and tolls have been accordingly levied by them upon vessels navigating the rivers which bound or intersect their territory; at the same time that exceptional privileges of freely navigating such rivers were granted by the same Supreme Authority to one or more other States of the Empire, and have continued to be enjoyed by them since they have become Independent Nations.

³⁷ Gunther, T. II. § 14.

§ 156. The Stade or Brunshausen Toll, levied by The Stade or Brunshausen Toll. Hanover on the vessels and goods of Foreign Nations ascending the river Elbe from the Sea, was an instance of the Right of Empire exercised under qualifications. The origin of this toll is lost in antiquity. The earliest document in which it is mentioned, is a charter of the Emperor Conrad II, dated December 10, 1038, which grants the then existing toll levied near the place of Stade to the Archbishops of Bremen, which Grant was confirmed by the succeeding Emperor Henry III, on 13 May, 1040. His successor the Emperor Henry IV, annexed the County of Stade with all the tolls and duties then levied to the Archbishopric of Bremen. The right thus conveyed existed in all its generality until the Emperor Frederic I, on the 7th May, 1189, granted to the citizens of the old Town of Hamburg, at the instance of Count Adolphus of Schaumburg, the privilege of their ships and goods passing free of the Stade Toll. The exemption enjoyed under this privilege was vigorously contested by the Archbishop, as an infringement upon a vested Right and also upon the property of the Church, but it was ultimately established, on the 8 Dec. 1268, by the superior might of the Hamburg Burghers, since which time the right of free navigation has been enjoyed by the Burghers of the old Town of Hamburg down to the present day. By the peace of Osnabruck, (8 Sept. 1648,) Bremen, which had been erected into a Duchy, was transferred to Sweden, and the Stade Toll was levied by the King of Sweden, as Duke of Bremen, down to 1712, when Denmark wrested from Sweden the Duchies of Bremen and Verden, and ceded them to the Elector of Hanover. At the conclusion of the subsequent peace (9th Nov. 1719) the Elector of Hanover was formally invested with the two Duchies by the Emperor of Germany, in the same way as the King of Sweden had been invested after the peace of Osnabruck. From this investiture Hanover claimed her right to levy the Stade or Brunshausen Toll. At the time when the Stade Toll was established, the Elbe was a river of the German Empire, and the levying of river tolls was amongst the rights, which by the law and customs of the Empire appertained to the Imperial Crown. It was competent therefore to the Emperor Charles the Great to establish passage-duties upon vessels entering the mouth of the river Elbe, and it is probable that the then frequented harbour of Stade was one of the places selected by that Emperor. It was equally competent for a subsequent Emperor to grant the Duchy of Bremen with all the tolls therein levied to a Prince of the Empire, and to sanction the ultimate transfer of the Bremen Fief with all its rights to the Elector of Hanover. Upon the devolution of the Supremacy of the Emperor and the Empire to the immediate vassals of the Imperial Crown, the Elector of Hanover and the Free City of Hamburg became Independent Sovereign Powers, and they continued to enjoy henceforth, in such character, the respective rights and privileges in regard to the navigation of the river

Elbe, which they had heretofore enjoyed as immediate vassals of the Imperial Crown. The King of Hanover continued to levy toll upon all vessels entering the river Elbe from the sea, with the exception of vessels belonging to Burghers of the old Town of Hamburg. The right of Hanover and the privilege of the old Town of Hamburg had equally a lawful origin, and both had been exercised for so many centuries, that they had acquired the sanction of long established custom as against each other and against other Nations.

After the Powers assembled at the Congress of Vienna had agreed, that the tolls to be taken on the great navigable rivers of Europe should be settled by a common accord amongst the Riverain Powers, the Commissioners of the Elbe-bordering States assembled at Dresden, (3 June, 1819,) for the purpose of settling a scheme of Elbe-tolls. On this occasion Hanover appears to have contended, that the Stade Toll was a Sea-toll, as distinguished from a River-toll; and consequently was not within the scope of the Treaty-Engagements of Vienna. A subsequent and more careful investigation induced Hanover to admit that the Stade Toll was a River-Toll, and it was accordingly regulated by the Elbe-bordering States under the Convention of Dresden²⁸, (30 August, 1843.) This toll accordingly, which was originally a territorial toll levied under the authority of the Roman Emperor of the Germans upon all vessels coming from the Sea into a river of the Germanic Empire, having been regulated by a Convention in pursuance of the Treaty-Engagements of Vienna, had thus been sanctioned by the Conventional Law of Europe. The Stade Toll had beyond all doubt a rightful origin, and its rightful origin secured its recognition; unlike the Glückstadt toll, which the King of Denmark, as Duke of Holstein, attempted to levy in the Seventeenth Century upon all vessels passing by the Port of Glückstadt, but which the English and Dutch nations³⁹, and above all the citizens of Hamburgh, successfully resisted. The Stade Toll has now become a matter of history. It was suppressed in respect of European vessels in pursuance of a general European Treaty signed at Hanover on 22 June, 1861, and in respect of vessels under the flag of the United States of America under a Convention between the United States and Hanover of 6 November, 1861. In both cases compensation was made to Hanover for the sacrifices imposed upon her.

²⁸ Martens, N. R. Général, V. p. 530.

³⁹ Treaty of 1645. Schmauss, Molesworth's Account of Denmark. Jur. Gent. I. p. 356. Lord mark, anno 1692.

CHAPTER X.

RIGHT OF JURISDICTION.

Incidents of the Right of Empire—National Sovereignty properly Territorial—The Jus Civile of a State operative only within its Territory—The Comity of Nations sometimes gives effect to Foreign Laws—Personal, Real, and Mixed Statutes—Growth of Private International Jurisprudence—Exceptional position of Europeans whilst resident amongst Asiatic Nations—Personal Actions of Foreigners—Extra-territoriality of certain Foreign Persons and Things—Merchant Vessels subject to the Territorial Law—Right of Emigration—Domicil the criterion of National Character—Jurisdiction and Remedies—Comity of Nations in regard to Personal Property—Domicil of Origin and Domicil of Choice.

§ 157. THE Empire of a Nation within its own territory is of Natural Right exclusive and absolute: it is susceptible of no limitation not imposed by the Nation itself, for any restriction imposed upon its exercise, deriving force from an external authority, would imply an impairment of a Nation's Independence to the extent of that restriction, and an investment of Sovereignty to the same extent in that Power which had imposed such restriction. All exceptions, therefore, to the free exercise of the Right of Empire by a Nation within its own territory must be derived from the consent of the Nation itself.

Incidents of the Right of Empire.

The Right of Civil and Criminal Legislation in respect of all property and persons within the territory of a Nation is an incident of the Right of Empire. It follows, therefore, that the Laws of every Nation bind of Natural Right all property situate within its territory, as well as all persons resident therein, whether they be natives or strangers, and that they control and regulate all the acts done or contracts entered into within its limits.

Every Nation has accordingly an absolute right to order the conditions, under which Real or Personal Property situate within its territory may be held or transferred, as well as to determine the capacity of all persons resident therein to enter into Contracts, as well as the formalities requisite to give legal effect to such Contracts, and the rights and obligations resulting thereupon; and finally to prescribe the conditions under which actions at law may be brought before its tribunals, and the remedies which may be administered in its Courts¹.

National Sovereignty properly Territorial.

§ 158. A Nation cannot by its Laws directly bind property which is beyond the limits of its territory, nor directly control persons who are not resident therein. This is a necessary consequence of the proposition advanced in the preceding section; for it would be inconsistent with the absolute character of Territorial Empire, if the Laws of a Nation could bind persons or property within the territory of another Nation, and so control the operation of the Laws of the latter Nation within its own territory. Rodenburg has accordingly observed, that no Sovereign Power can of Right set Law beyond the limits of its territory. "Constat igitur extra territorium legem dicere nemini licere; idque si fecerit quis, impune ei non pareri, quippe ubi cesset Statutorum fundamentum, cessant robur et jurisdictio²." Boullenois lays down a similar rule: "Of strict Right, all the Laws set by a Sovereign have only force and authority throughout his dominions³." Vattel concurs in this view, when he says, "The Empire united to the domain establishes the jurisdiction of the Nation within its territory. It is its province, or that of its Sovereign, to exercise Justice in all the places under its Empire; to take cognisance of the crimes that are committed, and the differences that arise in the country⁴." No law accordingly is operative, proprio vigore, beyond the limits of the territory of the State which has set it⁵. "There is no doubt," writes Chancellor Kent⁶, "of the truth of the general proposition, that the Laws of a country have no binding force beyond its own territorial limits, and their authority is admitted in other States, not ex proprio vigore, but ex comitate, or in the language of Huber, "quatenus sine præjudicio indulgentium fieri potest," &c. Another eminent American authority, Chief Justice Parker, has recognised a similar doctrine in an elaborate Judgment, in the course of which he observes, that "the laws of a State cannot by any inherent authority be entitled to respect extra-territorially, or beyond the jurisdiction of the States which enact them; this is the necessary result of the Independence of distinct Sovereignties⁷."

¹ Boullenois, Traité des Statuts, T. I. p. 2, 3, 4. Story, Conflict of Laws, § 18, 19. Foelix, Droit International Privé, § 9.

² Rodenburg, De Statutis, Tit. I. c. 3. § 1.

³ Boullenois, Traité des Statuts, Principes Généraux, VI.

§ 159. A difference of kind exists between the Authority which a Nation claims to bind its own natural born and naturalised subjects by its laws, in whatever country they may be, and the Right which a Nation possesses to control by its Laws all persons and property within its territory. The former authority is founded upon an implied or express Compact amongst the members of the Political Society which constitutes the Nation, and which Compact

Jus Civile
of a State
operative only within its territory.

⁴ Droit des Gens, B. II. § 84.

⁷ Blanchard v. Russell, 13

⁵ Martens, Précis du Droit des Gens, § 86.

Massachusetts Repts. p. 4. cf.
Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13

⁶ Kent's Commentaries, Tom. II. § 457.

Peter's Repts. p. 584.

has given rise to personal obligations on the part of the subject members towards the Sovereign Power; by virtue of which the Sovereign Power of a Nation may enforce its Laws against the subject members, as soon as they have returned within the limits over which its Right of Empire extends.

The latter Right is incidental to the Right of Empire; which is a Paramount Right within the limits of a Nation's territory. When, therefore, it is said that the Sovereign Power of a Nation may bind by its Laws its natural born or naturalised members everywhere, it must be understood that this attribute of personal Sovereignty is subordinate to the attributes of territorial Sovereignty; and that a Nation cannot enforce its Laws against its subjects whilst they are within the territory of another Nation. The exercise of personal Sovereignty on the part of a Nation over its own natural born and naturalised subjects, in respect of matters happening within the territory of another Nation, is not in point of Natural Right altogether clear upon any acknowledged principle; nor is the authority of a Nation to bind them, whilst they are within the territory of another Nation, by personal Laws recognised by other Nations. Residence is, in fact, the foundation of Jurisdiction under the Law of Nations. To be resident within the territory of a Nation is to be subject to its Jurisdiction; but Nations, from considerations of mutual Comity, do not apply the same Laws in all matters to persons who are only temporarily resident, as to persons who are permanently resident within its territory. The discretion, however, of a Nation as to the particular Law which shall be administered in its Courts is absolute, and it may decline to allow its Courts to give any effect to Foreign Law: on the other hand, if it allows its Courts to administer Foreign Law in disputes between foreigners, or otherwise, it adopts tacitly the Foreign Law as its own for the settlement of such disputes.

•

§ 160. The Laws of a Nation can only have effect or obligation within the territory of another Nation by virtue of the express or tacit consent of the latter. A Nation may prohibit the operation of all Foreign Laws, and refuse to recognise any rights growing out of them within its territory. On the other hand, it may prohibit some Foreign Laws, and give operation to others, either absolutely, or sub modo. If the Statute or Common Law of the Nation speaks clearly in such matters, it must be obeyed by all within the local limits of its authority. When both are silent, European Courts of Justice under the Comity of Nations presume the tacit adoption of the Laws of a Foreign Nation by their own Government, in matters which regard Foreign Interests, unless they are repugnant to its own policy, or prejudicial to its own interests. No Nation can be justly required to give up its own fundamental policy and institutions in favour of those of another Nation; much less can any Nation be required to sacrifice its own interests in favour of another Nation, or to enforce doctrines which in a moral or political view are incompatible with its own safety or happiness, or with its conscientious regard to justice and duty. It is therefore essentially a question of Comity between Nations, to what extent effect shall be given to Foreign Law, and all questions of Comity depend upon a variety of circumstances, which cannot be reduced to any certain rule. Huberus^s has propounded upon this question three maxims, which Mr. Justice Story, Mr.

The Comity of Nations sometimes gives effect to Foreign Law.

^s De Conflictu Legum, L. I. Tit. III. § 2.

Wheaton, and M. Fœlix equally approve, as being conformable to the practice of Nations. The first is, that the Laws of every Empire have force only within the limits of its own Government, and bind all who are subjects thereof; but not beyond those limits. The second is, that all persons who are found within the limits of a Government, whether their residence is permanent or temporary, are to be deemed subjects thereof. The third is, that the rulers of every Empire from Comity admit that the Laws of every people in force within its own territorial limits ought to have the same force and effect everywhere, so far as they do not prejudice the power or rights of other Governments, or of their citizens. "From this," Huberus adds, "it appears that this matter is to be decided not simply by the Civil Law of a Nation, but by the reciprocal convenience and the tacit consent of different Nations; for since the laws of one people cannot have any direct operation amongst another people, so nothing could be more prejudicial to the commerce and general intercourse of Nations, than that what is legally valid in one place should become without effect by reason of the diversity of the Law in another place". Certain Jurists have contended that the term Comity is not sufficiently expressive of the obligation of Nations to give effect to Foreign Laws, when they are not prejudicial to their own rights and interests, and have suggested that the doctrine rests on a deeper foundation; and that it is not so much a matter of Comity or Courtesy as a matter of paramount Moral Duty. "Now if it be assumed," writes Mr. Justice Story, "that such a Moral Duty exists, it is clearly one of imperfect obligation, like that of beneficence, humanity, or charity. Every Nation must be the final judge for itself, not only of the nature and extent of the duty, but of the occasions on which its exercise may be justly demanded; and certainly, there can be no pretence to say that any Foreign Nation has a right to require the full recognition and execution of its own Laws in other territories, if those Laws are deemed oppressive or injurious to the rights or interests of the inhabitants of the latter, or if their Moral character is questionable, or their provisions are impolitic or unjust¹⁰. Even in other cases it is difficult to perceive a clear foundation in Morals, or in Natural Law, for declaring that any Nation has a right (all others being equal in Sovereignty) to insist that its own Positive Laws should be of superior obligation in a Foreign Realm to the Domestic Laws of the latter, which may be of an equally positive character. What intrinsic right has one Nation to declare that no Contract shall be binding, which is made by any of its subjects in a Foreign Country, unless they are twenty-five years of age; any more than another Nation, where the Contract is made, has a right to declare, that such Contract should be binding, if made by any person of twenty-one years of age. One would suppose that if there be anything within the scope of National Sovereignty, it is the right of a Nation to fix what shall be the rule to govern Contracts made within its own territory¹¹."

* Bynkershoek, De Foro Legatorum, c. 2. Martens, Précis, § 84. Klüber, Droit des Gens, § 54.

§ 161. A distinction has accordingly been made by the Civilians between Personal Statutes, Real Statutes, and Mixed Statutes. Personal Statutes, ac-

*Personal,
Real, and Mixed Statutes.*

¹⁰ Story's Conflict of Laws, Martin's Louisiana Repts. 569—§ 33. 598.

¹¹ Saul v. his Creditors, 17

according to this classification, are those portions of the Civil Law of a Nation which have persons principally for their object, and treat only of property as an accessory; such are those which regard birth, legitimacy, freedom, the right of instituting suits, majority as to age, incapacity to contract or to make a will or to sue in proper person, &c. Real Statutes are those which have property principally for their object, and which do not speak of persons except in subordination to property; such as those Laws which concern the disposition which may be made of property either by deed or by will. Mixed Statutes are those which concern at once persons and property. This threefold classification has been considered by Merlin¹² to be unnecessary, as every Statute ought to receive its denomination according to its principal object; and according as that object is real or personal, so ought the quality of the Statute to be determined. But the distribution of Statutes into three classes is usually adopted, as stated by Rodenburg¹³; because there is a corresponding difference of fact in the scope of Statutes, for a Statute either disposes respecting persons in the abstract, without any regard to things; as, for instance, at what age a person shall be a free agent (Sui juris), and cease to be subject to the parental authority, (patria potestas), or it disposes of things without regard to persons; as, for instance, whether property of a certain quality can pass by will, or must be transmitted by deed, and in either case, with what formalities; or it enables or forbids certain persons to do certain things, as it forbids a father to alienate

¹² Merlin, Répertoire du Droit.
Art. Statut.

¹³ De Statutorum Diversitate,
c. 2. p. 4.

his patrimonial estates, and permits him to dispose of property acquired during his lifetime¹⁴.

§ 162. With regard to Personal Statutes, they are held to be of general obligation and force everywhere. Real Statutes, on the other hand, are held to have no extra-territorial force or obligation. With regard to Mixed Statutes, the extent and degree of their operation is one of the most intricate questions of International Jurisprudence. Thus much however may be said, that their operation is not a question of Right, but of Comity; and that the Comity of Nations extends thus far only. If, for instance, a Mixed Statute involves a question of Contract, and it is sought to enforce the Contract within the territory of an Independent Power other than that Power within whose territory the Contract has been made, it is necessary in the first place, that the subject matter of the Contract should be such as does not contravene the Law or policy of the Power, before whose tribunals it is sought to be enforced. This fact being established as a preliminary, the tribunals of the latter Power will take into consideration the lex loci contractûs, to determine the constat of the obligation, but they do not administer the Law of the place, where the Contract was entered into, in awarding the remedy. They award only that remedy which the Lex Fori expressly ordains, or a remedy which is in accordance with the analogy of the Lex Fori.

The administration of Foreign Law by Courts of Justice under the Comity of Nations has given rise to an extensive department of Juridical Science, obs. 2. and by Voet, de Statutis, § 4. c. 2. See Pothier, Coutumes d'Orléans, c. 1. § 1. Art. 6, 7, 8.

¹⁴ The distribution of Statutes into three classes is also adopted by Boullenois, Traité des Statuts Réels et Personnels, L. I. c. 2.

Growth of Private International Ju-risprudence.

which has been termed Private International Jurisprudence. This branch of Juridical Science, which is concerned more especially with the conflict of Laws arising out of the relations of civil life, which exist between the citizens of different States, proceeds upon a wise and liberal regard to the mutual convenience and mutual necessities of mankind. The real difficulty is to ascertain what principles in point of public convenience ought to regulate the conduct of Nations in these matters in regard to one another. The necessity of the general welfare has sanctioned certain exceptions to the rule, Statuta suo clauduntur territorio, nec ultra territorium disponunt; and the Civil legislation of one Nation may through the Comity of another Nation have effect given to it beyond the limits of its territory. But there is no such Comity in regard to the Criminal legislation of a Nation, and where the Criminal Law of one Nation has effect given to it within the territory of another Nation it is in virtue of express Conventions.

Exceptional position of Europeans whilst resident amongst Asiatics.

§ 163. Instances of such Conventions are found in the Capitulations between the Christian Powers of Europe and the Ottoman Porte; whereby magistrates nominated by various Christian Powers are respectively empowered to administer the Law of their own Nation amongst its subjects, who may be resident within the Ottoman territory. Treaties to a similar effect have been concluded by the Emperor of China with Great Britain¹⁵, (22 July, 1843,) with the United States of North America¹⁶, (3 July, 1844,) with France¹⁷, (24 Oct. 1844,) and with Russia¹⁸, (13 June, 1858,) and by the Mikado of Japan with

¹⁵ Martens, N. R. Gén. V. p.

¹⁷ Id. VII. p. 443.

434.

¹⁸ Id. XVI. pt. II. p. 128.

¹⁶ Id. VII. p. 134.

Great Britain¹⁹, (26 August, 1858,) and with France²⁰, (9 Oct. 1858,) and subsequently with most of the European Nations. Such treaties, however, are in the highest degree exceptional. But the Law of European Nations has itself always been exceptional in its application to Mahommedan and other Non-Christian Nations. Amongst Christian States there are no such fundamental differences in their respective standards of Morality, as to render the Criminal Law of one State totally inapplicable to the subjects of another State; but amongst the Mahommedan and Buddhist Nations there is so essential a diversity in the sanctions, which religion and morality attach to human conduct, as contrasted with those which prevail throughout Christendom, that from the oldest time an immiscible character between Europeans and Orientals has been maintained. Europeans are not admitted into the general body and mass of the society of Asiatic Nations²¹; they continue strangers and sojourners in the land, if they reside amongst them; they form de facto an extra-territorial community, which does not acquire a National character by permanent residence amongst them. In former times when it was the custom of the Christian Powers of Europe to maintain Factories in the cities of the Levant, Europeans permanently trading under the shelter and protection of those establishments were held to take the National character of the Association, under which they lived and carried on their commerce. The modern system of exercising treaty-jurisdiction leads to the presumption, that the subjects of the Powers which are parties to those treaties, ¹⁹ Martens, N. R. Gén. XVI.

pt. II. p. 430.

²⁰ Ibid. p. 439.

²¹ The Indian Chief, 5 Robinson's Rep., p. 29.

being exempt from the territorial Sovereignty of the State, wherein they permanently reside, will retain, notwithstanding such residence, the National character which attaches to them by their origin.

Personal
Actions of Foreigners.

§ 164. In Great Britain, in the United States of North America, in the Germanic States, in Holland, foreigners equally with natives are allowed to bring personal actions against foreigners before the tribunals of the country where they may happen to reside. They cannot bring real or possessory actions, as those are within the exclusive competency of the Courts of the loci rei sitæ. But inasmuch as by the Law of Nations the jurisdiction of a Nation extends over all persons and property within its territory, with the exception of the persons and property of Sovereign Princes and their Representatives, it would seem clear upon general principles, that it is a matter of civil policy to decide, in what manner that jurisdiction should be exercised as between foreigners. In some countries, such as Spain and Portugal, there have been special tribunals constituted under treaty-engagements and charged with the jurisdiction over questions in which foreigners were concerned. The Judges of those tribunals were termed Judges-Conservators. In Portugal there was a remarkable privilege enjoyed by British subjects. The Treaty of 1654 concluded between the Republic of England and the Kingdom of Portugal provided for the appointment of a Judge-Conservator of the British Nation, whose province it was to decide all actions between British Subjects not having a Portuguese Domicil by the Law of Nations, and all actions between British and Portuguese subjects. There was an analogous Treaty of a later date between France and Portugal in regard to French Subjects. But in case of a suit of a French Subject against a British Subject, the privilege granted to the British Nation being the most ancient, the Judge-Conservator of the British Nation was held to be the Competent Judge²². The institution of a special judge to administer justice between resident foreigners not domiciled in Rome, and between resident foreigners and Roman Citizens, was a peculiar feature of the early Roman Jurisprudence. The functions of the Prætor Peregrinus are described as being those of a Judge qui inter cives et peregrinos jus dicebat, and the rules of law which he administered were classed by the Roman Jurists under the head of Jus Gentium, or the law which Natural Reason teaches all mankind, and which is observed equally by all Nations, and under which all kinds of personal contracts are comprised²³. France occupies a somewhat exceptional position as contrasted with the States above mentioned. Two foreigners who have entered into a contract in a foreign country are not allowed to sue each other upon the contract before a French Tribunal, unless one or other of the foreigners has acquired a French domicile before the contract was entered into²⁴. The same rule prevails in Belgium and in the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies, where the Code Napoleon has been introduced. The principle of jurisprudence, upon which this practice is based, is comprised in the maxim, Actor sequitur forum Rei, according to which every defendant is entitled to be sued before his natural judges. The Code Napoleon interprets this maxim in such a case as referring to the ²² Gazette des Tribunaux of 16 and 17 Oct. 1843, cited by Fœlix, Traité du Droit International, T. I. § 148.

²³ Ex hoc jure gentium et omnes paene contractus intro- ducti sunt, ut emptio, venditio, locatio, conductio, societas, depositum, mutuum, et alii innumera-biles. Just. Inst. L. I. Tit. II. § 2.

²⁴ Code de Commerce, Art. 631.

Tribunals of the domicil of the Defendant. Vattel²⁵ applies this maxim in a different manner; he holds that, "disputes that may arise between foreigners or between a foreigner and a citizen are to be determined by the Judge of the place, and according to the laws of the place. And as the dispute properly arises from the refusal of the defendant, who maintains that he is not bound to perform what is required of him, it follows from the same principle, that every defendant ought to be prosecuted before his own Judge, who alone has a right to condemn him and compel him to the performance. The Swiss have wisely made this rule one of the articles of their alliance, in order to prevent the quarrels that might arise from the abuses that were formerly too frequent in relation to this subject. The defendant's Judge is the judge of the place where the defendant has his domicil, or the Judge of the place where the defendant happens to be when any sudden difficulty arises, provided it does not relate to an estate in land, or to a right annexed to such an estate. In this latter case, as property of that kind is to be held according to the laws of the country where it is situated, and as the right of granting possession belongs to the ruler of that country, differences relating to such property cannot be decided anywhere except in the State on which it depends." M. Foelix, in commenting on the practice of the French Tribunals, considers that the refusal of the French Tribunals to take cognisance of personal actions, in which both the Plaintiff and Defendant are foreigners temporarily resident in France, is a violation of the Law of Nations as received in Europe, and exposes French Subjects to a reciprocal disability before the tribunals of another country, wherein they may be temporarily resident, seeing that the condition of reciprocity is presumed, whenever the Comity of Nations is invoked.

²⁵ Droit des Gens, L. II. § 103.

§ 165. The privilege of Extra-Territoriality, or im- Extra-Territoriality of certain Foreign Persons and Things. munity from the Civil Law of the Territory, is by the practice of Nations accorded to all Sovereign Princes and their attendants, who may be temporarily within the territory of an Independent Power. The same privilege is accorded to the Representatives of Foreign Sovereigns, who may be permanently resident under the title of Ambassadors or Envoys at the Court of an Independent Power. By the established practice of Nations the House of Residence of an Ambassador or Envoy is held to be subject to the civil and criminal jurisdiction of the Sovereign whom he represents, to the exclusion of the jurisdiction of the Sovereign to whom he is accredited, and within whose territory he resides. All persons attached to the person of the Ambassador and all his moveable effects partake in this immunity. In a similar manner, if an Independent Power permit the armed forces of another Nation to pass through its territory, this permission implies a waiver on its part of all jurisdiction over the troops during their passage through its territory, and a license to the commander to maintain that discipline, and to inflict those punishments, which the government of his troops may require. On the other hand, if an armed force should enter by land the territory of an Independent Power without its permission, such Power is entitled to exercise its absolute territorial jurisdiction over them, and if it thinks fit, to disarm them. The rule, however, which applies in relation to an armed force upon land, does not apply equally to an armed force upon the sea, as by the usage of Nations ships of war may freely enter the ports of a friendly Power without express permission, unless there be an especial prohibition against vessels of war entering such ports. It is competent for every Nation for reasons of State Policy to close all its ports, or certain only of its ports, against the vessels of war of all Nations or against the vessels of war of a particular Nation, but in such cases notice is usually given of such determination. If there be no such prohibition, the ports of a Friendly Nation are considered to be open to the public ships of all Powers, with which it is at peace, for purposes of hospitality, and they are supposed to enter such ports under an implied license from the Sovereign Power of the place. This implied license in the case of a public ship is by practice construed to carry with it a total exemption from the law of the territory. A public vessel of war represents the Sovereign Power of the Nation, under whose commission and flag it sails. If it leaves the High Seas, the common highway of Nations, and enters within the maritime territory of a Friendly State, it is entitled to the same privileges which would be extended to the person of the Sovereign²⁶. A ship of war has been termed an extension of the territory of the Nation to which it belongs, not only when it is on the wide ocean, but when it is in a foreign port. In this respect a ship of war resembles an army marching by consent through a neutral territory. Neither ships of war nor army so licensed fall under the jurisdiction of a Foreign State²⁷.

Merchant Vessels are subject to the Territorial Law.

§ 166. Private vessels, on the other hand, enter the ports of a foreign Nation for the purposes of trade, under the implied protection of the Sovereign of the place, but subject at the same time to the Law of the

²⁶ Lord Chief-Justice Marshall's Judgment in The Schooner Exchange v. McFaddon, 7 Cranch's

American Repts. p. 116.

²⁷ Dr. Channing on the Duty of Free States.

Territory. So complete is the authority of the lex loci over all persons and property on board of private vessels, that if a vessel under the British Mercantile Flag, whilst slavery was a social institution of the Southern States of North America, entered the port of Charleston, having free negro sailors amongst her crew, the mercantile flag did not protect those sailors from the operation of the territorial Law of the state of South Carolina, which forbade a free negro to be at large within the limits of that State. It thus frequently happened that negroes, or persons of colour, though free subjects of her Britannic Majesty, and duly entered on the muster roll of the Crew of a British merchant vessel, on such vessel entering the port of Charleston, were taken out of her by the officers of the Port under the authority of the local law, and were detained in custody until the vessel cleared outwards, when they were again placed on board of the ship with permission to leave the country. On the other hand, if a merchant ship under a foreign flag were to enter a British Port with one or more negro slaves on board, her mercantile flag would not avail to exclude the jurisdiction of the British Courts, if their territorial authority should be invoked to vindicate the personal liberty of an human being who is within British Territory²⁸. It follows, that the crew of a merchant vessel, which is within the port of a foreign Nation, are amenable to the territorial Law of that Nation in respect of all offences against that Law committed within the port, whether those offences be committed on board the merchant vessel or on shore. But if an assault be committed on board a merchant vessel whilst she is on the High Seas, such an offence is only cognisable by the courts of the country to which she belongs; no one on board of her may be impleaded for such offence before the courts of a foreign country, although the vessel may enter its ports immediately after the offence has been committed. The crime of piracy, of course, is an exception to this rule, being an offence under the Law of Nations, which may be punished even on the High Seas by the first comer, and which crime every sovereign Power has a concurrent jurisdiction to suppress.

²⁸ It was decided in the memorable case of Somerset the Black, by a Judgment of the Court of King's Bench, June 22, 1772, that a State of Slavery cannot exist in Great Britain.

Right of Emigration.

§ 167. Considered from an international point of view, the jurisdiction of a Nation must be founded either upon the fact that the person or the property is within its territory. Considered from a civil point of view, jurisdiction may be founded upon natural as well as local allegiance; in other words every independent State claims to make laws perpetually binding upon its natural born subjects, wherever they may be. But natural allegiance, or the obligation of perpetual obedience to the government of the country, wherein a man may happen to have been born, which he cannot forfeit, or cancel, or vary by any change of time, or place, or circumstance, is the creature of Civil Law, and finds no countenance in the Law of Nations, as it is in direct conflict with the incontestable rule of that Law; "Extra territorium jus dicenti impune non paretur"²⁹.

Vattel, accordingly, holds that a citizen has an absolute right to renounce his country and abandon it entirely—a right founded on reasons derived from the very nature of political society. For instance, if the citizen cannot procure sustenance in his own country, it is undoubtedly lawful for him to seek it elsewhere. If the society of which he is a member fails to discharge its obligations towards a citizen, he may withdraw himself. If the major part of a Nation, or the Sovereign who represents it, attempts to enact laws relative to matters in which the Social Compact cannot oblige every citizen to submission, as for instance in the affairs of Religion, those who are averse to such laws have a right to quit the Society and settle themselves elsewhere. Citizens, who under such circumstances abandon their native country sine animo revertendi, and settle themselves elsewhere, are called Emigrants, and the Law of Nations recognises in such persons a capacity to acquire the National character of the country of their adoption.

²⁹ Dig. L. II. Tit. 1. § 20. Pothier, Pandect. L. I. T. 1. n. 7.

§ 168. According to the Law of Nations, when the National character of a person is to be ascertained, the first question is, in what territory does he reside, and is he resident in that territory for temporary purposes, or permanently. If he resides in a given territory permanently, he is regarded as adhering to the Nation to which the territory belongs, and to be a member of the political body settled therein. If he is only resident in a given territory for temporary purposes, he is regarded as a stranger thereto, and a further question must then be asked, in what country is his principal establishment, and where, when he has returned, does he consider himself to be at home⁵⁰. The country, which satisfies the conditions implied in this further question, is designated in the language of the criterion of National character.

Domicil,

⁵⁰ In eo loco singulos habere domicilium non ambigitur, ubi quis larem, rerumque et fortunarum suarum summam constituit, unde non sit discessurus, si nihil avocet; unde cum profectus est, peregrinari videtur, quo si rediit, peregrinari jam destitit. Codex, L. X. Tit. XXXIX. § 7.

public Law the Domicil of the individual, which Vattel³¹ defines as a fixed residence in any place with the intention of always remaining there. Wolff has, in a similar manner, defined domicilium to be "habitatio aliquo in loco constituta, perpetuo ibidem manendi animo³²." The word Domicil is originally a term of Roman Municipal Law, the Romans using the expression to denote the place in which a Roman citizen had to discharge his municipal obligations, in distinction from the place in which he was born; and in this sense it is employed by Grotius³³, as illustrating the privilege which Roman citizens enjoyed under the later Imperial Constitutions, of transferring their permanent abode from one Municipium to another. The distinction between the civis and the incola was founded thereupon. "Cives quidem origo, manumissio, allectio, vel adoptio, incolas vero domicilium facit³⁴," and jurisdiction was made in many cases to depend upon the place of residence of the individual, as distinguished from the place of his birth. The question of Domicil lost its importance after the conquest of the Roman Empire by the Barbarians, as for a long time a system of personal laws prevailed amongst the communities of mixed races, the Lombard living under the Lombardic, and the Roman under the Roman Law³⁵; but after the Peace of Westphalia, from which event we may date the commencement of normal intercourse between European Nations³⁶, the subject of Domicil came to be again discussed by Jurists under new circum-

³¹ Droit des Gens, L. I. § 217.

³² Jus Gentium, § 137.

³³ De Jure Belli et Pacis, L. II. c. V. § 24.

³⁴ Codex, L. X. Tit. 29. § 7.

³⁵ Savigny, Geschichte des Rö-mischen Rechts im Mittelalter, c. III. § 30.—Story's Conflict of Laws, § 2.

³⁶ The establishment of permanent Embassies at Foreign Courts dates from this period.

stances, namely, with reference to the residence of individuals in different Territories, and not as in the Roman system of Law, with reference to their residence in different places within the same Territory, namely, the Roman Empire. Sir Robert Phillimore, in his *Treatise on Domicil*³⁷, has observed that "as the subjects of one kingdom began to migrate into and reside in other countries, the various questions, arising from a conflict between the municipal regulations of the original and the adopted country, gave importance to the Law of Domicil, and rendered the maintaining an uniformity of rules respecting it in Christendom a matter of great consequence. Lord Campbell, to the same effect, in a recent judgment of the House of Lords, overruling the Scotch Courts of Exchequer, has taken occasion to remark, that "the doctrine of Domicil has sprung up in Great Britain very recently, and that neither the Legislature nor the Judges thought much of it, but it is a very convenient doctrine, it is now well understood, and it solves the difficulty with which this case was surrounded³⁸." Sir Robert Phillimore has further remarked most aptly, that the circumstance which has most contributed to give importance to the Law of Domicil, has been the universally increasing value of personal property.

§ 169. Jurists have laid it down that there are, Jurisdiction and Remedies. properly speaking, three places of jurisdiction; first, the domicile of the defendant, commonly called forum domicilii: "Nam ubi domicilium reus habet, vel tempore contractus habuit, licet hoc postea transtulerit, ibi tantum eum conveniri oportet³⁹;" secondly, the place where the thing in controversy is situated, commonly called forum rei sitæ: "Sed et in locis, in quibus res, propter quas contenditur, constitutæ sunt, jubemus in rem actionem adversus possidentem moveri"⁴⁰; and thirdly, the place where the contract is made or other acts done, commonly called forum rei gestæ or *forum contractûs*⁴¹: "Illud secundum est, eum, qui ita fuit obligatus, ut in Italia solveret, si in provincia habuit domicilium, utrobique posse conveniri, et hic et ibi"⁴². These distinctions constitute the basis of the reasoning of most Jurists in discussing the competency of tribunals to hold jurisdiction of causes and the proper operation of Judgments and Decrees (rei judicatæ); as for instance, whether they are final and preclude any further proceeding on the same cause of action before the Tribunals of another country. Some countries, such as France, repudiate all obligation on the part of their Tribunals to administer the law of the forum contractûs. Other countries, such as Great Britain and the United States of America, administer the law of the forum contractûs in this manner: "What the nature of the obligation is must be determined by the laws of the country where it was entered into, and then this country will apply its own law to enforce it"⁴³. "We all agree that in construing contracts we must be governed by the laws of the country where they are made, for all contracts have reference to such laws. But when we come to remedies, it is another thing. They must be pursued by the means which the law points out, where the parties reside. The laws of the ⁴⁰ Codex, Lib. III. Tit. XIX.

³⁷ The Law of Domicil, § 8. (House of Lords) Reports, p. 1.

³⁸ Thompson v. Advocate General, 12 Clark and Finelly's § 2. ³⁹ Codex, Lib. III. Tit. XIII.

§ 3.

⁴¹ Huberus, Lib. V. Tit. I. Boullenois, Obs. § 25.

⁴² Dig. L. V. Tit. I. s. 19. § 4.

⁴³ Lord Chief Justice Eyre in Melan v. Fitzjames, 1 Bos. and Puller, 138.

country where the contract was made can only have reference to the nature of the contract ; not to the mode of enforcing it. Whoever comes voluntarily into a country subjects himself to the laws of that country, and therein to all remedies directed by those laws on his particular engagements⁴⁴. It is immaterial whether the remedies given by the law of a foreign country, to the tribunals of which country the complaint is made, exceed or fall short of those given by the law of the place of contract ; in either case the parties to a suit must accept the remedy of the Forum, to which they have appealed. Lord Tenterden in a more recent case has said, "A person suing in this country must take the law as he finds it. He cannot by virtue of any regulation in his own country enjoy greater advantages than other suitors here, and he ought not therefore to be deprived of any superior advantage which the law of this country may confer. He is to have the same rights which all the subjects of this country are entitled to⁴⁵." A similar doctrine has been solemnly promulgated in the House of Lords on a still more recent occasion⁴⁶.

§ 170. The rightful exercise of jurisdiction on the part of a Nation depends upon one or other of these conditions, that the person or the property is within the territory of the Nation. In either of these cases a Nation is capable of enforcing the judgment of its tribunals in invitos. If the persons are within its territory, the Sovereign Power of the Nation can compel them to appear before its tribunals, and can enforce its decisions in personam. If the property is within its territory, the Sovereign Power of the Comity of Nations in regard to personal property.

⁴⁴ Mr. Justice Heath in Ogden and Adolph. 284.

v. Saunders, 12 Wheaton, p. 213.

⁴⁵ Don. v. Lipmann, 5 Clark

⁴⁶ Dela Vega v. Viana, 1 Barn. and Finelly, 1, 13, 14.

Nation has control over it, and can enforce its judgments in rem. But the exercise of the strict Right of Nations has been tempered by the Comity of Nations with respect to persons, and with respect to personal as distinguished from real property, and in practice the Civil Law of a Nation has exclusive operation given to it only with respect to persons domiciled within its territory, and with respect to real property which is there situate. The maxim mobilia sequuntur personam is interpreted to signify that moveables are, in law, attached to the person of the owner, although they may in fact be apart from it. The incidents of Moveable property are accordingly regulated by the same law as the person of the owner, that is by the law of his Domicil. "Les meubles," says Cochin, "quelque sorte qu'ils soient, suivent le Domicile"⁴⁷. Personal property having no Situs of its own, follows the domicil of its owner⁴⁸. Mr. Justice Story, in his Conflict of Laws, has discussed at great length the reasoning of various Jurists as to the grounds upon which this doctrine proceeds, but their arguments all lead to the same result, and whatever may have been the true origin of the doctrine, it has now received so general a sanction amongst civilized nations, that it may be treated as part of the Jus Gentium. The grounds upon which the English Tribunals have received the doctrine are stated by Lord Loughborough: "It is," he says, "a clear proposition not only of the Law of England, but of every country in the world, where Law has the semblance of a Science, that personal property has no locality. The meaning of this is, not that personal property has no visible locality, but that it is subject to that law which governs the person of its owner, both with respect to the disposition of it, and with respect to the transmission of it, either by succession or by the act of the party. It follows the law of the person⁴⁹." Lord Chief Justice Abbot has observed on a more recent occasion, that "personal property has no locality, and even with respect to that, it is not correct to say that the Law of England gives way to the law of the foreign country, but that it is part of the Law of England that personal property should be distributed according to the *Jus Domicilii*⁵⁰."

⁴⁷ Cochin, Œuvres, Tom. V. General, 12 Clark and Finelly, p. 85. (House of Lords) Repts. p. 1.

⁴⁸ Thomson v. The Advocate

§ 171. The Domicil of a person for international purposes may be either his Domicil of origin, or his Domicil of choice. The Domicil of origin of a person is identical with the Domicil of his father at the time of his birth. "Patris originem unusquisque sequatur"⁵¹. If his parents at the time of his birth should be on a temporary visit to a foreign country, the home of the parents, and not the country of his birth, is the Domicil of origin of the child⁵². The Domicil of origin is thus not necessarily identical with the place of birth. The place of birth, on the other hand, may constitute a person a natural born subject of one Sovereign for municipal purposes, whilst he is a domiciled subject of another sovereign for international purposes. The Domicil of origin cannot be divested during minority by a change of residence on the part of the minor with the intention of making his new residence his home, but it may be divested by the act of his father. If the father changes his

Domicil of Origin and Domicil of Choice.

⁴⁹ Still v. Worswick, 1 Henry 451, S. C. 2 Clark and Fin. 571. Blackstone's Repts. 690.

⁵⁰ Doe d. Birthwhistle v. Vardill, 5 Barn. and Cresswell, 438,

⁵¹ Codex, Lib. X. Tit. XXXI.

⁵² § 36.

⁵³ Wolfii Jus Gentium, § 138.

residence and acquires a new Domicil, it becomes the Domicil of his minor children, and if the father dies leaving minor children surviving him, the father's Domicil of choice at the time of his death is the necessary Domicil of his children until they come of age, and are capable of acquiring a Domicil of choice. Every person of full age is capable of selecting a Domicil; and if such a person removes from the country, where his father had his Domicil, to a foreign country with the settled purpose of making it his permanent residence, the country of his adoption becomes his domicil of choice. Domicil being thus under the Law of Nations the foundation of jurisdiction over persons, it is intelligible on general principles that the residence of Ambassadors and Political Envoys in a foreign country, even if such residence continue up to the time of their death, being a residence "sine animo manendi," should not operate to change their Domicil, such as it was at the time when they became resident in the foreign country; their extra-territoriality besides secures to them an "immiscibility" of national character. A different rule however prevails with respect to Consuls or Commercial Agents, who, if permanently engaged in commerce themselves, may acquire a Domicil in the country where they reside. It is sometimes a question of great intricacy to determine in what place a person has his legal Domicil. No person according to the Law of Nations is without a Domicil. In the absence of all evidence of any other Domicil de facto, the Domicil of Origin is the Domicil *de jure*⁵³, but a person may have more than one Domicil for commercial purposes; as for instance, a person may be a partner in a great commercial establishment in New York, and in another equally great commercial establishment in Liverpool⁵⁴; and in respect of contracts he may be subject to two different jurisdictions according as the contract is entered into by the New York establishment, or by the Liverpool establishment; but no person can have more than one testamentary Domicil, as the latter is identical with the place of the party's principal establishment. To enter more minutely into the criteria of Domicil would be foreign from the purpose of the present treatise, which is concerned with Domicil only so far as the principle of Domicil influences the Jurisprudence of Nations, in reference to persons and personal property. Mr. Justice Story's excellent work on the Conflict of Laws and M. Foelix's treatise on Private International Law may be consulted with advantage by those, who desire to become more accurately acquainted with the details of this branch of the Law of Nations.

⁵³ Quoniam tamen domicilium naturale tamdiu quis retinere censetur, quamdiu propria voluntate sibi nullum constituit, vagabundi quoque domicilium naturale vulgo retinere censetur. Wolff. Jus Gentium, § 139.

⁵⁴ Labeo judicat eum, qui pluribus locis ex æquo negotietur, nusquam domicilium habere; quosdam autem dicere refert, pluribus locis eum incolam esse, aut domicilium habere; quod verius est. Dig. L. Tit. I. § 5. The San José Indiano and Cargo, 2 Gallison's American Reports, p. 287. The Portland, 3 Robinson, p. 41. The Jonge Classina, 5 Robinson, p. 502.

CHAPTER XI.

RIGHT OF THE SEA.

The use of the open Sea common to all mankind—A Common Law of the Sea—Affinity to the Roman Law in certain matters—Origin of the Admiralty Jurisdiction—Its connection with that of the Consules Maris—Piracy justiciable everywhere—Concurrency of Admiralty with National Jurisdiction—National Jurisdiction over the open Sea—Maritime Jurisdiction of a Nation—Territorial Seas distinguished from Jurisdictional Waters—Prescriptive Right over portions of the Sea—Narrow Straits—Right of Fishery on the High Seas—Neutrality of Jurisdictional Waters—Right of Maritime Toll in respect of Lighthouses and Sea-Marks—Prescriptive Right of Sea-Toll—The Sound Dues—The Straits between the Mediterranean and the Black Sea—The Comity of Nations in matters of Revenue and Quarantine—Right of Fishery in Jurisdictional Waters—Convention of 2 August, 1839, between Great Britain and France—Agreement of 1874 between the British and German Governments—Ceremonial of the High Seas—Ceremonial within Jurisdictional Waters—Origin of the Mercantile and of the Military flag of the Sea—Certain States entitled only to a mercantile flag—Project of a Swiss mercantile flag of the Sea—The Jerusalem or Terra Santa flag.

The use of the open Sea common to all mankind.

§ 172. THE Ocean or open Sea is by Nature not capable of being reduced into the Possession of a Nation, since no permanent settlement can be formed upon its ever changing surface; neither is it capable of being brought under the Empire of a Nation, as no armed fleet can effectively occupy it in its full extent, so as to preclude other Nations altogether from the use of it. Nature herself has in these respects set limits to human enterprise and human ambition. But independently of these insurmountable difficulties, the use of the open Sea, which consists in navigation, is innocent and inexhaustible; he who navigates upon it does no harm to any one, and the Sea in this respect is sufficient for all mankind. But Nature does not give to man a right to appropriate to himself things which may be innocently used by all, and which are inexhaustible and sufficient for all. For since those things, whilst common to all, are sufficient to supply the wants of each, whoever should attempt to render himself sole proprietor of them, (to the exclusion of all other participants,) would unreasonably wrest the bounteous gifts of nature from the parties excluded. Further, if the free and common use of a thing, which is incapable of being appropriated, were likely to be prejudicial or dangerous to a Nation, the care of its own safety would authorise it to reduce that thing under its exclusive Empire, if possible, in order to restrict the use of it on the part of others, by such precautions as prudence might dictate. But this is not the case with the open Sea, upon which all persons may navigate without the least prejudice to any Nation whatever, and without exposing any Nation thereby to danger. It would thus seem that there is no Natural warrant for any Nation to seek to take possession of the open Sea, or even to restrict the innocent use of it by other Nations¹.

§ 173. The open Sea is, strictly speaking, nullius territorium. No Nation can claim to exercise jurisdiction over its waters on any ground of exclusive Possession. On the other hand, it is the public highway of Nations, upon which the vessels of all Nations meet on terms of equality, each vessel carrying with it the laws of its own Nation for the government of those on board of it in their mutual relations with

A Common Law of the Sea.

¹ Vattel, Lib. I. c. 23. § 279. Grotius, Lib. I. c. 2. § 3. Wolffii Jus Gentium, § 127. Kluber, § 132.

one another, but all subject to a Common Law of Nations in matters of mutual relation between the vessels themselves and their crews. The origin of this Common Law of the Sea is lost in the darkness of a very remote antiquity, but it sprang into existence with the earliest necessities of maritime commerce. We find the rudiments of such a law amongst the Athenians; and the Rhodian Laws of the Sea, of which a very few fragments have been preserved in the Digest³, are supposed to have been a collection of Maritime Customs observed amongst the Nations established on the shores of the Mediterranean⁴, and which formed at such time their Common Law on Maritime matters. Rules of Law which prevailed amongst those Nations are still recognised by the Maritime tribunals of existing European Nations, as rules for the decision of analogous questions.

Affinity to the Roman Law in certain matters.

§ 174. It would appear, that the Romans under the Empire with their usual wisdom recognised the Customs of the Sea, as furnishing the rule of decision in Maritime questions, where such Customs were not contrary to any positive Law of the Empire. Thus when Eudæmon of Nicomedia appealed to the Emperor Antonine against the rapacity of the Publicans in the islands of the Cyclades, on the occasion of his having suffered shipwreck, the Emperor is represented to have replied⁴, "Ego quidem mundi dominus, Lex autem maris. Lege id Rhodia, quæ de rebus nauticis præscripta est, judicetur, quatenus nulli nostrarum legum adversatur. Hoc idem Divus Augustus iudicavit." Bynkershoek⁵, in discussing this passage of the Digest, has not approved the usual punctuation,

³ Dig. L. XIV. Tit. II.

⁴ Dig. L. XIV. Tit. II. § 9.

⁵ Peckii Comment. ad legem
Rhodiam de jactu.

⁵ De lege Rhodia, c. 7.

nor admitted the received interpretation of the text, and has suggested that the words of the Emperor Antonine point only to a privilege which the Rhodians themselves enjoyed of living under their own laws, as long as they were not inconsistent with the Positive Law of the Empire. It is not very material for our present purpose to determine, which is the more correct construction of the passage in the Digest. On a careful examination of the legislation of the Roman Emperors, so little will be found of positive enactment in Maritime matters, that we are led irresistibly to the conclusion, that there must have been a Consuetudinary Law, according to which questions of Maritime Contract and Tort were settled; and the probability is, that the principles involved in that Consuetudinary Law were in harmony with principles that were admitted in the Civil Law of Rome. At all events we find in portions of the Consuetudinary Law of the Sea, as it has come down to us in various collections of Sea-Customs, e.g. 'the Rooles or Jugemens d'Oleron, the Consolato del Mare, and the Maritime Law (Wâter-Recht) of Wisby, many features of resemblance to provisions which exist in the Civil Law of Rome, not indeed in pari materia, but on subjects of which the analogy is complete. It is possible that these Rules of the Sea may be actual traditions of the Civil Law itself, which, recommended by its natural equity, may have infiltrated itself imperceptibly into Maritime causes. Whatever may be the true explanation of this resemblance, these Customs of the Sea have been received by all Nations, and all Nations exercise a concurrent jurisdiction to enforce them, and for this purpose there are special tribunals established in every country, known as Courts of Admiralty Jurisdiction.

⁶ Pardessus, Collection de Lois Maritimes antérieures au XVIII^e Siècle. Paris, 1834.

Origin of the Admiralty Jurisdiction.

§ 175. The origin of the term Admiral or Amiral is not agreed upon amongst learned men. Some have inclined to derive it from the Saxon *aen mere eal*⁷, that is, over all the sea, others from the Asiatic Amir, or Emir, signifying Præfect. It seems more probable that the term came first into use amongst the Maritime Nations of Southern Europe, and that it was derived from an Oriental Source. Sir H. Spelman is of opinion, that this high Officer was not known in England by that name or style before the beginning of the reign of King Edward I, about the year 1272, although the office of Capitaneus maris existed before that time. The earliest Admiral of all France seems to have been Enguarantus Dominus de Causy in the reign of Philip the Bold, about 1280⁸. The collection of Castilian Laws, known as Las Siete Partidas, and the origin of which is referred to a date as far remote as 1258 or 1266, contains a full definition of the Office of Admiral. "On appelle Amiral, le chef de tous ceux qui composent l'équipage des navires armés en guerre, et il a sur la flotte qui est comme le corps d'armée principal, ou sur une escadre qui sera détachée, le même pouvoir que le roi lui-même, s'il était en personne⁹." Such seems to have been a brief summary of the functions of the Admiral of the King of Castile and Leon. On the other hand, it would appear from a collection of Maritime Laws of Catalonia and Aragon of the Fourteenth Century¹⁰ that the word "Amiral" in its simplest sea-meaning was used to

⁷ Godolphin, a View of the Admiralty Jurisdiction, anno 1661, p. 3.

⁸ Part II. Lib. IV. Tit. 34. Lex 3.

⁹ Godolphin on the Admiralty Jurisdiction, p. 21.

¹⁰ Pardessus, Lois Maritimes, Tom. V. p. 404.

denote the chief of any Maritime expedition, even if the expedition consisted of a single ship. It is not improbable that an extraordinary increase of piracy in the latter part of the Thirteenth Century led to a more careful administration of the Laws of the Sea in England, in France, and in Denmark, after the example perhaps of Castile, and that the jurisdiction and cognisance of all matters whatever happening upon the Sea, by reason whereof there should be cause of suit either between subjects and strangers or between strangers only, was with that object vested exclusively in a High Admiral with the full powers of the Lieutenant of the King.

§ 176. Whatever may have been the origin of the institution of Courts of Admiralty, the forms of their proceedings were undoubtedly borrowed from the Civil Law of Rome, and the rules by which they were governed were, as is everywhere avowed, the ancient Laws, Customs, and Usages of the Seas. There can scarcely be a doubt that the Admiralty Courts of England and the Maritime Courts of all the other Powers of Europe have been formed upon one and the same common model, and that their jurisdiction, if not restricted by the territorial law, included all those subjects of which the Consular Courts (Consules Maris)¹¹ in the cities of the Mediterranean had cognisance, and with which subjects the Municipal judges in those cities were forbidden to intermeddle. These Courts are described in the Consolato del Mare as having jurisdiction of all controversies respecting freights; of damages to goods shipped; of the wages of mariners; of the partition of ships by public sale; of jettison; of commissions or bailments to masters and mariners; of debts contracted by the master for the use and necessities of his ship ; of agreements made by the master with merchants, or by merchants with the master ; of goods found on the high sea or on shore ; of the armament or equipment of ships, galleys, or other vessels, and generally of all other contracts declared in the Customs of the sea¹¹. It is not within the scope of the present work to enter further into the details of the Admiralty Jurisdiction. But it may be observed that there is a Maritime Law of Nations in time of war, as well as in time of peace. The Admiralty Court exercises a voluntary jurisdiction in time of Peace ad instantiam partis, and is in such matters termed an Instance Court, whilst in time of War it exercises a compulsory jurisdiction over all the commissioned vessels of the Crown, which are required to bring their captures before it, in order that the Admiral or his Lieutenant may determine whether such captures are good prize of war or not. The Admiralty Court is for such purposes termed a Court of Prize, and its functions are not merely to administer the Law of Nations as between the belligerents, but the Law of Nations as between the belligerents and neutrals.

Its Connection with that of the Consules Maris.

¹¹ De Lovio v. Boit. 2 Gallison's Reports, p. 400.

Piracy justiciable everywhere.

§ 177. The High Seas are said in a certain sense to be nullius territorium, as not being subject to the exclusive Possession or Empire of any Nation. In another sense they may be called the common highway of Nations, and perhaps this is the more correct expression, seeing that all who navigate them are subject to a Common Law of Nations, and, in matters within the scope of that Law, are amenable to the maritime tribunals of all Nations. The maintenance of the peace of the Sea is one of the objects of that Common Law, and all offences against the peace of the Sea are offences against the Law of Nations, and of which all Nations may take cognisance. The robber equally with the murderer on the High Seas is technically a sea-felon or pirate, and every hand may be lawfully raised against him; he is, in fact, regarded as an enemy of the human race (hostis humani generis). The Pirate has no National character, and to whatever country he may have originally belonged, he is justiciable everywhere, being reputed out of the protection of all laws and privileges whatever¹².

¹¹ Consolato del Mare, ch. 22. Godolphin, Adm. Jur. p. 45.

§ 178. There are however portions of the sea, upon which if offences be committed, they are not merely regarded as offences against the Peace of the Sea, but offences against the Peace of a Nation. Thus although the jurisdiction of the Admiralty travels everywhere with the flow of the tide, yet when the Sea approaches the territory of a Nation or passes within the headlands of its coast, an offence committed upon tidal waters may become an offence not merely against the Peace of the Sea, but against the Peace of the Nation, and accordingly will be cognisable by the Civil Courts of the Nation as well as by the Admiralty Court. By practice, indeed, the Admiralty Jurisdiction over tidal rivers is restricted to such portions of them as are below the first bridges¹³ (infra primos pontes) seawards. Above the first bridges, which are effective impediments to free passage to or from the sea, the Civil Law of the Nation is of exclusive force: below that point, until we reach the High Seas, the Civil Law of the Nation operates concurrently with the Maritime Law of Nations.

¹² Life of Sir Leoline Jenkins, phin, Adm. Jurisd. p. 134. cf. 15. Tom. II. p. 714. Rich. II. c. 3.

¹³ Spelman's Reliquiæ. Godol-

National jurisdiction over the open Sea.

§ 179. It becomes necessary therefore to inquire what portion of the open Sea is by the practice of Nations held to be within the operation of the Territorial Law of a Nation. "It is of considerable importance," writes Vattel¹³, "to the safety and welfare of States, that a general liberty be not allowed to all comers to approach so near their possessions, especially with ships of war, as to hinder the approach of trading Nations, and molest their navigation." Upon this principle a Neutral Nation is held to be entitled to preclude Belligerent Powers from carrying on mutual hostilities upon the open sea within a certain distance of its coast. That distance, as between Nation and Nation, is held to extend as far as the safety of a Nation renders it necessary, and its power is adequate to assert it; and as that distance cannot, with convenience to other Nations, be a variable distance, depending on the presence or absence of an armed fleet, it is by practice since the introduction of firearms identified with that distance, over which a Nation can command obedience to its Empire by the fire of its cannon¹⁴. That distance, by consent, is now taken to be a Maritime League seawards along all the coasts of a Nation. Beyond the distance of a sea-league from its coasts, the Territorial Laws of a Nation are, strictly speaking, not operative. It may happen that a Nation chooses to extend its own Laws over its National vessels wherever they may be navigated on the High Seas, but however general and comprehensive the phrases used in the Municipal Law may be, they must be always restricted in their construction to the citizens of the State, to which the vessel belongs¹⁵, and to the mutual relations between such citizens, and cannot be extended to the vessels of other Nations, or to the persons on board of them.

¹³ Droit des Gens, L. I. § 288. ¹⁴ Bynkershoek, L. II. c. 3. § 13.

¹⁵ The Apollo, 9 Wheaton's Reports, § 370.

§ 180. Writers on Public¹⁶ Law have spoken of the open sea (mare vastum) within the distance of a Maritime jurisdiction of a Nation. Maritime League along the coasts of a Nation as its Maritime Territory (See-Gebiet). If the Law of Nations be held to be a portion of the Law of each Nation in such matters as are within its scope, then there may be no valid objection to the use of the phrase Maritime Territory in the sense of Territory subject to the Law of the Sea, but inasmuch as the term territory in its proper sense is used to denote a district within which a Nation has an absolute and exclusive right to set Law, some risk of confusion may ensue if we speak of any part of the open Sea over which a Nation has only a concurrent right to set Law, as its Maritime Territory. It would tend to greater clearness, if Jurists were to confine the use of the term Maritime Territory to the actual coasts of a Nation, or to those portions of sea intra fauces terræ over which a Nation is entitled to exclusive jurisdiction, and over which its Territorial Law has paramount force and operation, and if they were to designate the extent of tidal waters, over which the Territorial Law of a Nation operates concurrently with the Law of Nations, as its *Jurisdictional Waters*¹⁷.

§ 181. If a sea is entirely enclosed by the Territory of a Nation, and has no other communication with the Ocean than by a channel, of which that Nation may take possession, it appears that such a sea is no less capable of being occupied and becoming property than the land, and it ought to follow the fate of the Territorial Seas distinguished from Jurisdictional waters.

¹⁶ Klüber, § 130. Wheaton's Elements, pt. 4. c. 4. § 6.

¹⁷ Mr. Justice Story has adopted this expression in his judgment in the Schooner Fame,

3 Mason's American Reports, p. 152.

country that surrounds it¹⁸. The Black Sea, whilst its shores were in the exclusive possession of the Ottoman Porte, was an instance of a Territorial Sea of this character. So likewise Straits, which serve as a communication between two seas, and of which the shores on both sides are the Territory of one and the same Nation, are capable of being reduced into the possession of that Nation. In the same manner a bay of the Sea, the shores of which are the Territory of one and the same Nation, and of which the entrance may be effectively defended against all other Nations, is capable of being reduced into the possession of a Nation. "By this instance," writes Grotius¹⁹, "it seems to appear that the property and dominion of the Sea might belong to him who is in possession of the lands on both sides, though it be open above as a gulf, or above and below as a strait, provided it be not so great a part of the Sea, as when compared with the lands on both sides, it cannot be supposed to be a portion of them."

Puffendorf²⁰, to the same effect, says, "that gulfs and channels or arms of the Sea are, according to the regular course, supposed to belong to the people with whose lands they are encompassed." Whenever a Nation has an exclusive right over an entire sea, or over a bay, no other Nation can claim a right of navigation therein against its will. But in case the opposite sides of a bay are inhabited by different Nations, then under the general Law of Nations, each Nation has a right to go to the central line, drawn at low water mark, as marking the extent of its jurisdictional waters²¹. But although the territorial limit of either Nation for purposes of absolute jurisdiction may not extend beyond the central deep-water line, yet the right of innocent use of the entire bay for the purposes of navigation or passage may be common to both Nations. Such a right does not destroy the territorial jurisdiction of each Nation as far as the middle of the water (medium filum aquæ), but it is in the nature of an easement, as it is called in English Law, or a servitude, as it is termed in the Roman Law²². It is in fact analogous to the right of private way over the land of another. This right of passage and navigation must exist as a common right in all those cases, where such passage or navigation is ordinarily used by both Nations, and is indispensable for their common access to their own shores. A bay may be so narrow, or so irregular, or so liable to difficulties from winds, waves, and currents, that it cannot be effectively navigated by either Nation, without each having a right of passing over any portion of the water at any time. If in such a case no exclusive right is recognised in either Nation, the constant use by both is a conclusive proof of both having a common right of passage and navigation.

¹⁸ Vattel, L. I. § 292. Wolff, c. 3. § 8.
§ 128.

¹⁹ De Jure Belli et Pacis, L. II. ²⁰ Law of Nature and of Nations, L. IV. c. 5. § 8. ²¹ Ibid.

§ 182. In the case of portions of the Sea, a Nation may have a peculiar possession of them, so as to exclude the universal or common use of them by other Nations²³. Lord Stowell held that portions of the Sea might be prescribed for²⁴; and Mr. Justice Story deemed it possible that a Nation might have an exclusive use founded on the acquiescence or tacit Prescriptive right over portions of the Sea.

²² Instit. II. Tit. 3. De Servitutibus. Hugo, Histoire de Droit Romain, T. I. § 202. Klüber, § 137.

²³ Klüber, § 133.

²⁴ The Schooner Fame, 3 Masson's Repts., p. 150. The Twee Gebroeders, 3 Rob. p. 339.

consent of other Nations. There is no inconsistency between these views and those of Grotius, who says, "that he who has occupied any part of the Sea cannot lawfully hinder the navigating therein of ships that are unarmed, and give no room to apprehend danger;" for Grotius must be understood as speaking of the natural right of a Nation, and not of an instituted right founded on the tacit consent of other Nations²⁴. Lord Stowell²⁵ has observed that the general presumption certainly bears strongly against such exclusive rights, and the title is a matter to be established on the part of those claiming it, in the same manner as all other legal demands are to be substantiated by clear and competent evidence; in other words, by proof of ancient and constant usage.

Narrow Straits.

§ 183. The difficulty in respect of narrow straits connecting portions of the open Sea and separating independent States, where the Straits are not of sufficient width to allow to each State a margin of jurisdictional waters to the extent of three miles from its coast, is solved by applying to them the same principle of law, which is applied to determine the extent of the jurisdiction of Riparian States over a river, which separates them, namely, that the Empire of each State extends to the mid-channel. The rule is thus expressed by Puffendorf²⁶: "But in case different nations border on the same channel, the sovereignty of each shall be conceived to reach unto the middle of the water from every part of their respective shores, unless either all the States have agreed by ²⁴ Puffendorf, L. IV. c. 5. § 8.

²⁵ Book IV. ch. v. § 8, Basil Kennett's translation, London,

²⁶ The Twee Gebroeders, 3 Rob. p. 339. 1728.

covenant to use the whole water promiscuously amongst themselves, and to exercise a general undivided sovereignty over it against Foreigners, or else if one particular people has obtained a dominion over the whole by pact, or by the tacit concession of the rest, or by right of conquest, or because they first fixed their station near it, and immediately took it into full possession, exercising acts of sovereignty against the people of the opposite shore, in which latter case nevertheless the other neighbouring States, their fellow-borderers, shall be supposed to be lords of each of their particular ports, and of so much of the sea as the convenient access to the shore requires." Puffendorf states this rule in general terms as applicable to straits of greater or less width, and the principle of law so expressed is affirmed to its full extent in a very ancient English Law Treatise, which was compiled in the reign of King Edward II, namely, "La Somme appellé Mirroir des Justices." The author of the work, Andrew Horn, Chamberlain of the City of London, cites an ordinance of King Edward I, which enumerates amongst the Jura Coronæ "La Soveraigne Signiory de tout la terre jesqu'al milieu de la mere environnt la terre!" Without however pressing the application of the principle of the medium filum aquæ in the present day to straits of an indefinite width, which nevertheless may have been of ancient days justifiable in the interest of maritime commerce with a view to put down piracy, the principle in its application to narrow straits is still in the present day highly convenient, and at the same time calculated to prevent controversy, and it has been maintained by Great Britain and by the United States of America to be the principle which regulates the general rights growing out of the Law of Nations on the subject. Any other rule would be attended with inconvenient consequences, as regards the inviolability of the marginal waters of the one or the other State, if it should be neutral, whilst its opposite neighbour should be at war, and as regards the right of either State to seize vessels for a violation of its Revenue Laws or of its Laws of Health, if they should be guilty of any illicit act in the waters adjoining its coast. Vattel has omitted to treat the case of straits of which the opposite shores are in the possession of different States, possibly because instances of such straits were not frequent in his time. The Sound, for example, of which he justifies the toll levied upon passing vessels, was in his day under the exclusive Sovereignty of one and the same monarch, the Crowns of Norway and of Denmark being at that time united. But several cases of straits have come under consideration in modern times, in which the existence of two rival or independent jurisdictions over the same waters would have been found highly inconvenient. For instance, there are sea-passages, such as the Lymoon Pass, which separates the Island of Hong Kong from the Chinese Mainland, which is less than three miles in width, and over which neither Great Britain nor China claims exclusive jurisdiction, but either State is content with exercising its jurisdiction ad medium filum aquæ. The same principle of law was observed in the negotiations between Great Britain and the United States, which ended in the Conventions of 1803 and of 1807, in which, according to Mr. Justice Story, the middle of the channel between the islands belonging to the respective nations was taken to be the true and proper boundary line between them in accordance with the general law of Nations. Professor Bluntschli²⁷ would therefore seem to have overlooked the received usage of Nations when he lays it down in his International Law Codified, that where two States are situated on the border of a free sea, so narrow that the zone of sea which forms part of the territory of the one overlaps the corresponding zone of the other, the two States are bound to accord to each other reciprocally rights of Sovereignty over the common space or to fix together a line of demarcation.

§ 184. Mr. Dudley Field, on the other hand, in his Draft Outlines of an International Code, says: "The limits of national territory bounded by a river or other stream, or by a strait, sound, or arm of the sea, the other shore of which is the territory of another Nation, extend outward to a point equidistant from the territory of the Nation occupying the opposite shore, or if there be a stream or navigable channel, to the thread of the stream, that is to say, to the mid-channel, or if there be several channels, to the middle of the principal one." The rule of the medium filum seems to recommend itself by its equity, whilst it satisfies the requirements of reciprocity, and a recent work on International Law from the pen of Professor F. de Martens of the University of St. Petersburg, states the general law on the subject of narrow Straits of the Sea in terms which accord with the rule which we have above stated. "Si un détroit se trouve sous la portée de canon d'un seul État, il est considéré comme dépendant de ce dernier et comme faisant partie de ses possessions territoriales. Si un détroit sépare deux États et n'a plus de 6 milles Anglais de large, on adopte comme frontière une ligne tracée au milieu des eaux." Such also seems to be the view adopted by M. Perels, Counsellor of the Admiralty of the German Empire, in his recent work on the International Public Sea Right of the present day, when he says: "As far as there is no limitation of the rights or obligations of either nation founded on Usage or Convention, the middle line of the water, in the case of bays or straits, after the analogy of rivers, has to be taken to be the limit of the sovereignty of each ²⁸." "Eine solche kommt namentlich bei Meerengen und Flussmündungen in Betracht. Man wird, so weit nicht observanzmässig oder conventionell eine Begrenzung der Rechte und Pflichten feststeht, analog wie bei der Flussgrenze, die Mittellinie des Gewässers als die Grenze der Souveränität anzusehen haben ²⁹."

²⁷ Le Droit International Codifié par M. Bluntschli, traduit de l'Allemand par M. G. Lardy.

3^{me} édition. Paris, Guillaumin et C^{ie}.

Right of fishery on the High Seas.

§ 185. The right of fishing in the open Sea or main Ocean is common to all Nations, on the same principle which sanctions the common right of navigation, namely, that he who fishes in the open Sea does no injury to any one, and the products of the Sea are in this respect inexhaustible and sufficient for all. It is possible indeed that one Nation may possess an exclusive right of navigation and fishing against another Nation, by virtue of treaty-engagements, as it is competent for a Nation to renounce a portion of its rights; and there have been instances of such renunciations both in ancient and modern times. Thus by the Treaty of Vienna, (16 March, 1731,) the House of Austria renounced in favour of the British and the Dutch the right of her subjects to send ships from the ports of the Low Countries to the East Indies. So by a Treaty concluded (anno 1500) between Henry VII of England and John II of Denmark, and by another treaty (anno 1523) concluded between Henry VIII of England and Christian II of Denmark, it was agreed that the merchants and fishermen of England should fish and traffic upon the Northern Sea betwixt Norway and Iceland, under the condition of first asking leave and renewing their Licences every seven years (de septennio in septennium) from the Kings of Denmark and their Successors. At a later period the Dutch appear to have admitted the exclusive right of the British to the fisheries in the North Sea, by making payment and taking out licences to fish, which payment and licences were afterwards suspended by Treaties between England and the Burgundian Princes. "All this," writes Grotius³⁰, after citing various instances of treaties from ancient history, "does not prove that those who thus limited the navigation of any other people had taken possession of the sea, or of the right to sail there. For Nations as well as private persons may give up not only that right, which is properly their own, but that also which they have in common with all mankind, in favour of him, for whose interest it is made." Treaties of this order have now fallen entirely into disuse.

²⁸ Traité de Droit International par F. de Martens, Professeur à l'Université de Saint Pétersbourg, traduit du Russe par Alfred Léo. Paris, 1883, p. 506.

²⁹ Das Internationale Öffentliche Seerecht der Gegenwart von F. Perels, Geh. Admiraltäts-Rath und vortragender Rath in der Kaiserl. Admiralität. Berlin, 1882, p. 42.

§ 186. The Neutralization of portions of the Sea, that is, the exclusion of Foreign Nations from the use of its waters for belligerent purposes, does not conflict with those considerations of Natural Right, which forbid the exclusion of Foreign Nations from

Neutrality
of jurisdictional
waters.

³⁰ L. II. c. 3. § 4.

the peaceful use of its waters. It may be regarded as an established rule of Public Law, that a Nation may prohibit all acts of hostility on the part of other belligerent Nations within the limits of its Maritime Jurisdiction, including the open Sea along all its coasts within the distance of a marine league. The same privilege is enjoyed in respect of Bays or Sea-Chambers³¹, that is, portions of the Sea cut off by lines drawn from one headland to another. The claim of Neutrality, however, cannot be maintained to the extent of prohibiting the armed vessels of a belligerent Power from passing over waters, claimed as neutral waters, with a view to an ulterior act of warfare against the Enemy. The act of passing in-offensively over such portions of water without any violence committed therein is not considered as any violation of Neutral privileges; such waters are regarded in times of war, equally as of peace, as the common thoroughfare of Nations, and no permission is required for liberty to pass through them; although they are privileged so far, that no actual acts of hostility may be committed within them. In certain cases the privilege of Neutrality seems to extend over portions of the Sea, which are not within the ordinary limits of the maritime jurisdiction of a Nation; as for instance, over arms of the Sea, and over broad Straits, such, for example, as the Strait which separates Ireland from Great Britain, commonly called St. George's Channel³². But this question belongs more properly to the Rights of Nations in time of War, and will be considered more fully in a

³¹ Life of Sir Leoline Jenkins, T. II. p. 727, 728, 780. Opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States on the case of the Ship Grange, 14 May, anno 1793, T. I. p. 15. Waite's American State Papers, T. I. p. 73.

³² Martens, Précis, § 42.

subsequent part of this work. Bynkershoek makes one exception to the violation of Neutral Waters, and supposes that if an enemy should be attacked upon the High Sea, and should take refuge within the jurisdictional waters of a Neutral Nation, the victor may pursue his vanquished foe dum fervet opus, and seize his prize within the jurisdiction of the Neutral State. Casaregis and some other foreign jurists maintain a similar doctrine; but Valin, Emérigon, Vattel, Azuni, and others are of an opposite opinion, and hold that when the flying enemy has entered the privileged limits of the Neutral Jurisdiction, he is under the safeguard of the Neutral Power. Lord Stowell³³ seems to consider that Bynkershoek's opinion is given with many qualifications, and expressly as an opinion which he did not find to have been adopted by any other writer, and Mr. Chancellor Kent³⁴ regards Bynkershoek's opinion as rested by him entirely on the authority and practice of the Dutch, and not confirmed either by the writings of Publicists or by the Usage of Nations. He holds, accordingly, that the opposite doctrine rests upon sounder views. In this equally as in any other case, a positive act of warfare would be in strict Law a violation of the privilege of the Neutral Power, which is entitled to protect all persons and property within its Maritime Jurisdiction. It is the privilege however of the Neutral Power alone to insist on the restoration of property captured within its Jurisdiction, and if there should have been extreme bad faith on the part of the worsted belligerent, as, for instance, if he should have lain in wait within the shelter of Neutral waters with a view to sally out suddenly, and take his adversary at a disadvantage, with the intention, if he should be worsted, to take refuge again within the Neutral waters, the Neutral Power may with reason decline to extend its shield over the vanquished, if the enemy whom he has attacked should pursue him dum fervet opus, and capture him within the Maritime Jurisdiction of the Neutral Power. It is sometimes a matter of treaty-engagement³⁶ between two Nations, that neither shall permit the ships or goods belonging to the citizens or subjects of the other to be captured within cannon shot of their coast, or in any of the bays, ports, or rivers of their territory by the ships of war of a third Power.

³³ The Anna, 5 Robinson, p. 385.

³⁴ Commentaries on American Law, Tom. I. § 120.

Right of Maritime Toll in respect of Lighthouses and Sea-marks.

§ 187. It is not contrary to the Law of Nature or that of Nations, writes Grotius³⁶, that those who shall take upon them the burden and charge of securing and assisting Navigation, either by erecting or maintaining Lighthouses, or by affixing Sea-marks to give notice of Rocks and Shoals, should impose a reasonable tax on all who sail that way. Martens classes this right amongst the Jura litoris. Azuni³⁷ considers that the Maritime Powers have a right to impose contributions upon all vessels, which are navigated within the limits of their Maritime Jurisdiction, to defray the expenses which are necessary to secure the safety or convenience of navigation. Accordingly if fire-beacons are kept alight on shore or afloat during the night, and buoys are placed upon the shoals to indicate the deep and shallow water passages, and skilful mariners acquainted with the dangers of the navigation are kept ready to act as pilots at the call ³⁶ Treaty between Great Britain and the United States, (anno 1794,) Art. 25. Martens, Recueil, V. p. 684.

³⁶ L. II. ch. III. § 14.

³⁷ Droit Maritime de l'Europe, L. IV. ch. IV. § 153.

of foreign vessels, and to conduct them safely along the coasts of a Nation; it is not contrary to the Law of Nature or of Nations that foreign vessels availing themselves of these aids to navigation, should be required to contribute to the expenses of maintaining them. Baldus³⁸ holds Sea-tolls to be most equitable in their nature, when they are levied to promote the security of navigation: "Vectigalia Maritima sunt æquissima, quoniam ad tuitionem maris et veram in eo securitatem præstandam constituta reperiuntur." Every vessel, which casts anchor within the jurisdictional waters of a Nation, becomes liable to the jurisdiction of that Nation in regard to all reasonable dues levied for the maintenance of the general safety of navigation along its coasts³⁹. If a vessel merely passes along the coasts of a Nation without casting anchor within the limits of a marine league, or without entering any port or harbour, it is not subject to the payment of any territorial dues. The Right of Passage over all portions of the open Sea is one of the Natural Rights of Nations. It can only be made subject to conditions by established Custom, which implies an immemorial acquiescence on the part of all Nations.

§ 188. The Right which a Nation has to levy contributions upon all ships which come within its Maritime Jurisdiction towards the maintenance of Lighthouses, Beacons, and other accessories to the safety of navigation, must not be confounded with a right which a nation may possess by Prescription to levy toll upon passing vessels⁴⁰. The Sound Dues formerly levied by Denmark upon all vessels passing Prescriptive Right of Sea Toll.

The Sound Dues.

³⁸ Baldus, Tit. de rer. div. col. 2.

³⁹ Azuni, Droit Maritime, ch. II. Art. IV. p. 288.

⁴⁰ The Dukes of Savoy at one time levied a toll, under the name of Villefranche, on all vessels passing within eighteen miles distance from the port of Nice.

Azuni, T. I. p. 281.

through the Sound and the Two Belts rested upon an immemorial prescription. The actual origin of these Dues is lost in the obscurity of a remote antiquity, and it must remain undetermined whether the Northmen, who were masters of the narrow Straits leading from the North Sea into the Baltic Sea, levied toll arbitrarily upon all passing vessels, as a consideration for permission to pass through the Straits unmolested, or as a compensation for expenses incurred by them in securing the safe navigation of the Baltic Sea by keeping it clear of pirates, and by maintaining Lights and Sea-marks to indicate the navigable channels. It is unquestionable, however, that, at the period when a system of Public Law began to regulate the intercourse of Nations, the claim to levy a toll upon a narrow Sea-passage, like the Sound and the Belts, was in strict conformity with the prevailing ideas as to the Right of Empire, which a Nation might exercise over straits of the Sea, the passage of which it could effectively control. Vattel⁴¹, for instance, places the right of Denmark to levy customs on the passage of the Sound on the same foundation with the right of a Nation to establish tolls upon land or upon a river. Whatever may have been the origin of the Sound Dues, the absolute Right of Denmark to the control of the Sea-passages into the Baltic was acknowledged by the Hanse Towns in a treaty as early as 1368, and by England as early as 1490; and the payment of tolls on the passage of the Sound was recognised as in previous use (wie vor alters her), in a treaty concluded at Spiers, anno 1544, between the Emperor Charles V and King Christian III of Denmark⁴². This treaty regulated the amount of the tolls, and formed a precedent for similar treaties between Denmark and other Nations⁴³. This Right has accordingly been rested by Danish Jurists on immemorial Prescription, sanctioned by the concurrent evidence of a long series of Treaties recognising the existence of these tolls "as of olden time," and stipulating only as to the amount and mode of levying them.

⁴¹ Droit des Gens, L. I. § 291.

⁴² Schmauss, Corp. Jur. Gentium I. p. 258.

The Sound Dues may henceforth be regarded as matters of history, rather than of practical interest, except as illustrating an Exceptional Right, which may have been in conformity with the General Law at the time of its origin, but which in modern times rested upon a very special foundation. The tolls were levied upon the tonnage of the ships and also upon the value of the goods laden on board, and the inconvenience to modern commerce, resulting from merchant vessels being obliged to bring up either at Elsinore if they passed through the Sound, or at Wyborg if they passed through the Great Belt, was found to be so great, that the maritime Nations of Europe⁴⁴ have entered into a Convention with Denmark to redeem the tolls for ever; in other words, to purchase for their own vessels the freedom of the navigation of the Sound and the Belts; and the United States of America, which had for a short time disputed the Prescriptive Right of Denmark as against a State of the New World, has followed the example of the European Powers, and has entered into similar Treaty-engagements with Denmark in behalf of American vessels⁴⁵.

⁴³ The treaty of 1645 is in XVI. pt. II. p. 345.
Schmauss, I. p. 536.

⁴⁴ Treaty of Washington, April

⁴⁵ Treaty of Copenhagen, March 11, 1857.
14, 1857. Martens, N. R. Gén.

The Straits between the Mediterranean
and the Black Sea.

§ 189. The exclusive Right which the Ottoman Porte exercises over the Straits and the intermediate sea which connect the Mediterranean with the Black Sea, rests upon a Prescription which has obtained the formal sanction of the Great Powers of Europe, under Conventions concluded between them and the Porte. The Right of the Porte had a lawful origin at the time when the shores of the Black Sea were in the exclusive possession of the Ottomans, but after Russia had made large territorial acquisitions on its shores, the latter Power, under the Common Law of European Nations, had a right to navigate the waters of the Black Sea, and to pass outwards with trading vessels into the Mediterranean. But the Ottoman Porte did not at that time acknowledge any Public Law in common with the Christian Powers of Europe, and the latter Powers had not the right, if they had possessed the might, to impose their system of law upon the Ottoman Nation. Accordingly as the Ottomans regarded no other law as binding upon them with regard to Christian Nations, than the express stipulations of treaties, the free navigation of the Straits was secured to the merchant vessels of Christian Nations by express Conventions on the part of the Porte, with Russia in 1774, with Austria in 1784, with Great Britain in 1799, with France in 1802, with Prussia in 1806. The Porte has meanwhile kept the Straits closed against the war-ships of all Nations during the time when it has itself remained at peace with all Nations, and this practice of the Porte obtained a formal sanction, as an ancient rule of the Ottoman Empire, from the Great European Powers with the exception of France, in the Treaty concluded in London, July 13, 1841⁴⁶. It was subsequently confirmed more formally as part of the Public Law of Europe by a Special Convention, annexed to the Treaty of Peace concluded at Paris, March 30, 1856⁴⁷. By a still later Treaty (Treaty of London, March 13, 1871)⁴⁸ the ancient rule of the Porte is maintained in force, but the Sultan has reserved to himself the faculty of opening the Straits in time of peace to the war-vessels of friendly and allied Powers in case the Sublime Porte may judge it to be necessary in order to secure the execution of the Stipulations of the Treaty of Paris of March 30, 1856.

⁴⁶ Martens, N. R. Gén. II. p. 128.

§ 190. There is a certain class of cases which seem at first sight to conflict with the position that a geographical league seawards along its coasts is the limit of the maritime jurisdiction of a Nation, and that beyond that distance its Civil Law is in operation only over its own National vessels. Thus the Statute Law of Great Britain (9 Geo. II. c. 35 and 24 Geo. III. c. 47), sometimes described as the Hovering Acts, authorises the National cruisers to seize all merchant vessels, which are found with certain cargoes on board destined for Ports of Great Britain, if they are found within the distance of four leagues from the Coast, and vessels so seized have been brought for adjudication before the tribunals of the seizers, and have been declared forfeited for an attempt at illicit trade. So, again, by 26 Geo. II. all vessels coming from places whence the plague might be brought, and as such liable to Quarantine, were required to make signals on meeting other ships within four leagues⁴⁹ of the United Kingdom under a penalty of 200*l*.

The Com-mity of Nations in Matters of Revenue and Quarantine.

⁴⁷ Martens, N. R. Gén. T. XV. p. 782.

⁴⁸ Id. XVIII. p. 303.

⁴⁹ The distance, within which vessels are regarded as amenable to British Quarantine Regulations, is fixed at two leagues from the British Coasts by 6 Geo. IV. c. 78.

In a similar manner the Acts of Congress of the United States of North America, such as the Collection Act of 1799 and the Act of 1807 against the importation of slaves, authorised the seizure of vessels laden with certain cargoes within four leagues of the American Coasts. The regulations of Portugal and of Spain, excluding the commercial intercourse of foreigners with their respective Colonies, were of an analogous character. Such laws and regulations, however, have no foundation of strict Right against other Nations. Lord Stowell, in the well-known case of the *Louis*⁵⁰, alludes to an instance of this kind in the case of a Swedish Ordinance authorising Swedish cruisers to examine foreign vessels on the high seas bound to Swedish Ports, which however was resisted by the British Government as unlawful, and the claim was finally withdrawn by the Swedes. In a similar manner Great Britain complained of the right claimed by Spain to search British vessels on the High Seas, which was carried so far that the Spanish guardacostas seized vessels not in the neighbourhood of their coasts. This practice was the subject of long and fruitless negotiations, and led at length to open war. Great Britain, however, did not contend that British vessels actually engaged in illicit trade were entitled to pass unmolested by the revenue cruisers of Spain until they came within the maritime jurisdiction of that country, but she maintained that Spain enforced her right of search for the protection of her commerce with her Colonies in an unreasonable and vexatious manner. Mr. Justice Story⁵¹ has properly pointed out that the State which authorises her cruisers to effect such seizures beyond the limits of her Maritime Jurisdic-

⁵⁰ 2 Dodson, p. 246.

Wheaton, p. 40. Church v. Hubbard, 2 Cranch, p. 235.

⁵¹ The Mariana Flora, XI

tion, incurs a responsibility towards Foreign Powers. It is only under the *Comity of Nations*⁵² in matters of Trade and Health, that a State can venture to enforce any portion of her Civil Law against foreign vessels, which have not as yet come within the limits of her Maritime Jurisdiction. A State exercises in matters of Trade for the protection of her Maritime Revenue, and in matters of Health for the protection of the lives of her people, a Permissive Jurisdiction, the extent of which does not appear to be limited within any certain marked boundaries, further than that it cannot be exercised within the Jurisdictional waters of any other State, and that it can only be exercised over her own vessels and over such foreign vessels as are bound to her ports⁵³. If, indeed, the Revenue Laws or the Quarantine Regulations of a State should be such as to vex and harass unnecessarily foreign commerce, foreign Nations will resist their exercise. If, on the other hand, they are reasonable and necessary, they will be deferred to ob reciprocam utilitatem. In ordinary cases indeed, when a merchant ship has been seized on the open seas by the cruiser of a Foreign Power, when such ship was approaching the coasts of that Power with an intention to carry on illicit trade, the Nation, whose mercantile flag has been violated by the seizure, waives in practice its right to redress, those in charge of the offending ship being considered to have acted with mala fides and consequently to have forfeited all just claim to the protection of their Nation.

§ 191. The Right of Fishery comes under different considerations of Law from the Right of Navigation, as the Right of Fishery in the open sea within certain

Right of Fishery in Jurisdictional
Waters.

⁵² Kent's Commentaries, Tit. I.
§ 31.

⁵³ The Apollo, 9 Wheaton,
p. 371.

limits may be the exclusive Right of a Nation. The usus of all parts of the open sea in respect of navigation is common to all Nations, but the fructus is distinguishable in law from the usus, and in respect of fish, or zoophytes, or fossil substances, may belong in certain parts exclusively to an individual Nation. The Practice of Nations has sanctioned the exclusive Right of every Nation to the fisheries in the waters adjacent to its coasts within the limits of its Maritime Jurisdiction⁵⁴, and accordingly we find that a permission for the subjects of one Nation to fish within the Jurisdictional waters of another Nation is a frequent subject of Treaty-engagement. "The various uses of the sea," writes Vattel⁵⁵, "near the coasts render it very susceptible of property. It furnishes fish, shells, pearls, amber, &c. Now in all these respects its use is not inexhaustible; wherefore the Nation, to which the coasts belong, may appropriate to itself an advantage which Nature has so placed within its reach, as to enable it conveniently to make itself master of it and to turn it to profit, in the same manner as it has been able to occupy the dominion of the land which it inhabits. Who can doubt that the pearl fisheries of Bahrem and Ceylon may lawfully become property? and though where the catching of (swimming) fish is the object, the fishery appears less liable to be exhausted, yet, if a Nation has on its coast a particular fishery of a profitable nature, and of which it may render itself master, shall it not be permitted to appropriate to itself that Natural benefit, as an appendage to the country which it possesses, and to reserve to itself the great advantages which it may derive by commerce, in case there be a sufficient ⁵⁴ Wheaton's Elements, Part II. c. 4. § 5. Azuni, Tom. I. c. 11. Art. 8.

⁵⁵ Droit des Gens, L. I. § 287.

abundance of fish to enable it to furnish the neighbouring Nations with a supply? But, if so far from making itself master of a fishery, a Nation has once acknowledged the common right of other Nations to come and fish there, it can no longer exclude them from it; it has left that fishery in its primitive state of communion, at least with respect to those who have been accustomed to take advantage of it." Treaty-engagements in such matters do not give any other right than that which is expressed in the specific terms, although there may be found in the recitals of certain Treaties recognitions of Rights founded on grounds independent of all Treaties. Thus there are early Treaties between France and England, under which it was agreed that the Subjects of either Crown might fish anywhere in the seas, which separate the two kingdoms, during certain seasons of the year. The legitimate inference, deducible from the fact that such fishery was made a matter of Treaty-engagement, is, that at other seasons of the year the Subjects of the two Crowns had not a common right of fishing everywhere in those seas. The existing Treaty-engagements between Great Britain and France proceed upon another view of mutual convenience, namely, that it is desirable to define the limits within which the general right of fishing upon all parts of the coasts of either Nation shall be exclusively reserved to its own Subjects. The Convention of Paris (2 Aug. 1839⁶⁶) has accordingly provided that the Subjects of either State shall enjoy an exclusive right of fishery within a distance of three miles from low water-mark along the whole extent of its coasts. There is one peculiar provision in this Convention, which deserves

Convention
between Great Britain and France.

⁶⁶ Martens, N. R. XVI. p. 954. British and Foreign State Papers, vol. xxvii. p. 983

notice. By the Ninth Article it is stated to be the understanding of both parties that the distance of three miles, limiting the exclusive right of fishery upon the coasts of the two countries, shall be measured in the case of bays, of which the opening shall not exceed ten miles, from a straight line drawn across from one Cape to another⁵⁷.

Agreement between British and German Governments.

§ 192. It appears from a notice issued by the British Board of Trade of the date of December 1874⁵⁸, that the British Government came to an agreement with the North German Government in 1868 respecting Regulations to be observed by British fishermen fishing off the Coasts of the North German Confederation, and subsequently to a further agreement in 1874 with the German Government respecting Regulations to be observed by British fishermen fishing off the Coasts of the German Empire, and thereupon issued a notice for the guidance and warning of British fishermen. This notice implies a recognition upon the part of the British Government of the same principles of exclusive right to be enjoyed by German fishermen fishing off the North Sea Coast of the German Empire, as it has recognised under the Convention of Paris (August 2, 1839) in the case of French fishermen fishing off the Coast of France, and as it has maintained in the same Convention on behalf of British fishermen fishing off the British Coast. The notice is of the following tenor:—

I. The exclusive fishing limits of the German Empire are designated by the Imperial Government ⁵⁷ This Treaty, although operative in British waters, is not operative in French waters, not having been sanctioned by the French Legislative Chambers.

Hertslet's Treaties, vol. XIV. p. 1200.

⁵⁸ Hertslet's Treaties, vol. XIV. p. 1057.

as follows :—That tract of the Sea which extends to a distance of three sea-miles from the extremest limit, which the ebb leaves dry of the German North Sea Coast, of the German islands or flats lying before it, as well as those bays or incurvations of the Coast which are ten sea-miles or less in breadth, reckoned from the extremest points of the land and the flats, must be considered as under the territorial sovereignty of the German Empire.

II. The exclusive right of fishery within the above limits is accordingly to be enjoyed by fishermen of German nationality only, and English fishing boats are not at liberty to enter those limits, except under the following circumstances, namely :—

(1) When driven by stress of weather, or by evident danger.

(2) When carried in by contrary winds, by strong tides, or by any other cause beyond the control of the master and crew.

(3) When obliged by contrary winds or tides to beat up in order to reach their fishing grounds, and when from the same cause of contrary wind or tide, they could not, if they remained outside, be able to hold on their course to their fishery ground.

(4) When, during the herring fishing season, English fishing boats shall find it necessary to anchor under shelter of the German Coasts, in order to await the opportunity for proceeding to their fishing ground.

(5) When proceeding directly to any port of the German Empire, open to Englishmen for the sale of fish, where the cargo is to be sold.

III. Fishing boats not of German nationality, which pass within the limits above mentioned without being compelled to do so by any of the circumstances above mentioned, and not being on their direct way to a port for the sale of fish, will be liable to be turned back; and in the event of their resisting, or in the event of their being found fishing within the limits above described, will be arrested and proceeded against before the nearest competent authority.

Ceremonial
of the High Seas.

§ 193. The High Seas being the common highway of Nations, all Nations meet thereon on terms of equality. The Usage of Nations has accordingly established a Ceremonial of the Sea to be observed between the public vessels of different Nations, and between public and private vessels respectively which meet upon the High Seas⁵⁹.

The question of Maritime Ceremonial, as regards the High Seas, was at one time considered not to involve considerations of courtesy merely as between Nation and Nation, but to imply a recognition of superiority and an acknowledgment of inferiority, as the case might be, on the one side or on the other, and disputes on this head have frequently given occasion to war⁶⁰. Nations, for instance, have claimed Rights of Sovereignty over considerable portions of the open Sea, and have insisted upon the public vessels of other Nations lowering their flag when sailing in those seas; or they have asserted a general Maritime supremacy, and insisted upon the public vessels of other Nations striking their flag to their armed ships, whenever they should meet them upon the High Seas. All these pretensions are now matters of ⁵⁹ Klüber, § 127. Martens, Précis, § 158. Bynkershoek de Dominio Maris, c. 1. and 4. Wheaton's Elements, Pt. II. c. 3. § 7.

⁶⁰ Ortolan, Diplomatie de la Mer, L. II. c. 15. Declaration of war by England against Holland, in 1652, and again in 1671.

History, and as far as salutes between the vessels of different Nations on the High Seas are concerned, whether those salutes consist in striking the flag, (salut de pavillon,) or in lowering the sails, (salut des voiles,) or in firing a certain number of guns, (salut du canon,) the Ceremonial is essentially a matter of courtesy. The Ceremonial as between public vessels is now confined entirely to a salute of guns. It is voluntary on either side, and it proceeds altogether upon a calculation of equality, as between Nations. All International salutes are therefore in strict practice to be returned gun for gun. In some cases this is matter of direct Convention between Nations; in other cases it is matter of courteous understanding between the commanders of the respective vessels; and Nations for the most part allow the commanders of their public vessels to reciprocate the special complimentary salutes, which the rules of their own service authorise in the case of one ship of war meeting another ship of war bearing the flag of an officer of superior rank. Thus a British⁶¹ ship of war, bearing the broad pendant of a Commodore, on meeting a French ship of war bearing an Admiral's Flag, may salute the French Admiral personally with the same number of guns to which a British Officer of corresponding rank would be entitled. It is understood, however, that the saluting vessel in such a case will receive a salute of gun for gun in return. A French vessel, on the other hand, is authorised to return the salute of a foreign vessel gun for gun, whatever may be the rank of the respective commanders of the two vessels, provided that the salute does not exceed twenty-one guns, which is the number of guns, as generally understood, for a Royal Salute⁶². The practice of most Nations is to salute with an uneven number of guns⁶³, but the regulations as to the number of guns to be fired on each occasion varies with the pleasure of each Nation. The following rules are general⁶⁴. A single ship of war by usage salutes a fleet or squadron, and an auxiliary squadron salutes the principal fleet. A vessel carrying a Captain's flag, salutes a vessel carrying a Commodore's broad pendant; and the latter in turn salutes the flagship of an Admiral. With regard to merchant vessels, the practice which prevailed in former days for them to salute the public ships of all Nations, has fallen into desuetude. It was a practice grounded originally on the fact, that the public ships of all Nations keep sentinel over the safe navigation of the High Seas, and in discharge of such duty are entitled to ascertain the character of all vessels navigating thereupon. Merchant vessels were accordingly bound to strike their flag, and lower their topsails to every vessel of war which they met. As a matter of courtesy in modern times, merchant vessels for the most part salute the public vessels of other Nations by lowering and rehoisting their flag three times. Ships of war, indeed, are so far entitled to ⁶² Ordonnance du Roi du 1 Juillet, 1831.

⁶¹ British Regulations relating to Salutes.

⁶³ It is stated by Martens, § 158, who is followed by Klüber, § 118, and several other publicists, "that Sweden is an exception to the rule of odd numbers, and that her vessels of war always salute with an even number of guns." The following are the regulations of the Swedish Navy, in the matter of naval salutes, published at Christiana, May 28, 1858. 1. A Swedish

Man of War being saluted by a foreign vessel, answers the salute with the same number of guns. 2. No salute must exceed twenty-one guns, even in answering a salute. 3. In foreign harbours it is left to the discretion of the Commanders to follow the rules of other Nations. 4. The salutes in the Swedish Navy vary from five, seven, nine, &c., to twenty-one.

⁶⁴ Martens, Précis, § 160. Klüber, § 122.

maintain guard over the safe navigation of the high seas, that they may rightfully compel a vessel, which does not exhibit any flag, to announce her National character by hoisting her colours, and for this purpose they are accustomed to fire a gun with blank cartridge as a signal to the merchant vessel to hoist her colours; if she neglects the notice, they may fire a shotted gun across her bows, and if after that warning she declines to hoist her colours, a ship of war may treat her as a vessel of no certain Nationality, and may compel her to bring to.

The regulations with respect to salutes to be rendered by merchant vessels to ships of war of their own Nation, are matters of Municipal regulation, as well as those which relate to the special flag, which merchant vessels are entitled to carry; but it is an offence by the Laws of the Sea for any private ship to wear the flags or ensigns peculiar to the public ships of its Nation, unless it has a commission from the Sovereign Power, which authorises it so to do; for the Public flag of a Nation represents the Nation itself, and is privileged accordingly; whereas the Mercantile flag of a Nation has freedom of access allowed to it upon implied conditions of a totally different kind.

§ 194. There is an order of Maritime Ceremonial which may be distinguished from the Ceremonial observed on the High Seas, and which implies a recognition of the Empire of a Nation over the navigable waters within which the Ceremonial is observed. Every Nation has by usage a right to order a Ceremonial to be observed by the vessels of all Nations, which come within its Maritime Jurisdiction, in relation to its own National vessels or to the vessels of other Nations; and likewise in regard to within Jurisdictional

Ceremonial
waters.

its own fortresses or naval arsenals⁶⁵. Bynkershoek rests this right upon the ground that all who enter within the Maritime Jurisdiction of a State are for the time subjects of that State. This may be a correct view of the condition of Public Law, under which private vessels of commerce leave the High Seas and enter the jurisdictional waters of a Foreign Power; namely, that they become subject temporarily to the Territorial Law of that Power. With regard to such vessels, there is no necessity for any special Convention respecting matters of Maritime Ceremonial, as between Nations; but with regard to public vessels, which represent the Nation in its character of an Independent Power, the question is subject to different considerations. The salute on the part of a public vessel depends either upon the Usage of Nations, or upon Treaty-engagements⁶⁶. By the Usage of Nations, ships of war always salute a fortress, if they pass within the limits of the Maritime Jurisdiction of the Nation to which the fortress belongs: they salute in like manner the guardship of a foreign port before they enter it, and the salute is reciprocated with the same number of guns, which tends to show that the salute is not a one-sided acknowledgment of temporary subjection, but is a mutual recognition of National Independence on either side. Nations in former times have asserted a right to exact a salute from the public ships of foreign Nations navigating narrow seas, or gulfs, as an acknowledgment of their having a right of Empire over such seas and gulfs⁶⁷. Claims of this kind have ⁶⁵ Bynkershoek, Qu. Jur. Publici, L. II. c. 21. Klüber, § 120. Martens, Précis, § 159.

⁶⁶ In the treaties between the Barbary States, and the Christian

States of Europe, the Salute was matter of arrangement as to the number of guns.

⁶⁷ Thus Great Britain once asserted a Right of Empire over given rise to long and disastrous wars, and their regulation has been repeatedly the subject of negotiations and treaties; they have now happily everywhere fallen into desuetude, seeing that the Ceremonial of the Salute is no longer connected with the idea of the supremacy of one Nation over another.

§ 195. It would appear that from a very early period it was the custom for vessels of commerce navigating the High Seas to carry an ensign (insigne) or a flag (flamma) denoting the ownership of the vessel, whether that ownership was vested in an individual person or in a company. The Roman Law (Gaius, l. 3, ad Edictum Provinciale⁶⁸) recognised companies or guilds of shipowners (navicularii) in the Provinces, and it may be inferred from the medieval Statutes of the chief Maritime cities of the Mediterranean⁶⁹ and of the Baltic⁷⁰ that the practice of merchant vessels carrying the flag of a company or a guild (ars) was still maintained in the thirteenth century, and was only giving way under the pressure of Municipal Statutes requiring them to carry the flag of the city from which the vessel hailed. The character of the flag to be carried by merchant vessels is in like manner regulated in the present day by the municipal law of the port from which each vessel hails, and an international usage has grown up, which gives support to the municipal law, by requiring every merchant vessel to be furnished with a Sea Letter⁷¹ or Certificate from the authorities of the

Origin of the Mercantile and of the Military
Flag of the Sea.

the British Channel; Venice over the Adriatic Sea; Genoa over the Ligurian Sea; Portugal over the Lusitanian Sea. Gunther, Tom. II. § 21-25.

⁶⁸ Justin. Digest. l. III. tit. IV.

§ 1.

⁶⁹ Statutes of Marseilles, a^o 1253; Ancona, 1397.

⁷⁰ Statutes of Hamburg, a^o 1270; Lubeck, 1299. See Twiss' Rights and Duties of Nations in Time of War, § 90.

⁷¹ In the case of British mer-port from which she hails, vouching her title to the flag which she carries, otherwise she may risk to be treated as a piratical vessel. At what time the custom became general for merchant vessels to carry a national flag is not very clear. The practice of vessels of war carrying a national ensign was most probably introduced at the time of the Crusades. Such is Cleirac's opinion as expressed in a memoir⁷² appended to his "Us et Coutumes de la Mer," a^o 1647; but the Ordinances of the Kings of France on the subject of the flag are not, as we believe, traceable further back than to an Ordinance of King Charles V of France of Dec. 7, 1373⁷³.

According to Cleirac, the object of a National flag was to classify the different bodies of troops and the various fleets of ships engaged in a Crusade, and the circumstance, that the national ensign of each of the Monarchical States of Christendom bore the emblem of a Cross, red, white, or gold as the case might be, on a field of a different colour, lends support to Cleirac's view. The Red Cross was the general device, which was granted by the Holy See to Princes and Cities that took part in the Crusades. The Red Cross on a silver field, known as St. George's Cross, was specially granted to the Kings of England and to the cities of Florence and of Genoa. It was also the flag of Portugal and of the city of Milan. The latter city retains the Red Cross, but the present Portuguese national ensign is per pale, blue and chant ships by the Merchant Shipping Act, 17 & 18 Vict. ch. 106, in pursuance of a Royal Proclamation of Jan. 1, 1801.

⁷² "Sur les livrées ou couleurs des Pavillons des Navires pour la connaissance et distinction de chaque Nation qui met à la mer."

⁷³ The text of this Ordinance is printed in the Appendix to the Black Book of the Admiralty, Rolls Edition, vol. I. p. 443, with its true date, from an unique MS. in the British Museum (Sloane MS. 2423).

white, and in the centre of the military flag is a red shield crowned and charged with towers, etc. England, on the other hand, has retained the St. George's Cross both in the Union Jack⁷⁴ and in her white Ensign, which is now the distinctive ensign carried by her vessels of war. The Royal Yacht Squadron, of which H.R.H. the Prince of Wales is Commodore, has the special privilege of using the white ensign, and this circumstance has led very recently to a refusal on the part of the Ottoman Authorities at the Dardanelles to allow a vessel of the Royal Yacht Squadron to pass the batteries at the mouth of the Straits, inasmuch as she exhibited an ensign usually worn by British vessels of war. The yacht in question was ultimately allowed to pass the Straits upon the anomaly having been explained to the satisfaction of the Ottoman Authorities.

It would seem that it rested with the admiral of each fleet in the days of the Crusades to assign to each vessel its proper ensign, and it was no longer permissible to the captain or owner to assume an ensign at his pleasure. The tradition has been maintained down to the present time, and the Admiralty of each Nation may be regarded in the present day as the administrative authority in all matters of the maritime flag. It is in accordance with this practice that in the recent charters granted by the Crown of Great Britain to the British North Borneo Company,

⁷⁴ The Union Flag was first adopted for British ships on the Union of the Crowns of England and Scotland in 1603, and it consisted of St. George's Cross, red on a white ground, combined with the Saltire of Scotland (St. Andrew's Cross), white on a blue ground. On the subsequent Union with Ireland in 1801 the Red Saltire of Ireland was introduced, counterchanged with that of Scotland. The blue field of the Union Jack is thus of Scotch origin, the flag of Ireland having been a red saltire on a white field.

there is a provision to the following effect: "The Company may hoist and use on its buildings and elsewhere in Borneo and on its vessels such distinctive flag, indicating the British character of the Company, as the Secretary of State and the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty from time to time approve." Nevertheless, the practice of using a House flag, as it is termed, is still maintained by the owners of British Merchant Ships, for the purpose of corresponding with their agents either on shore or on the High Seas. The character and the colour of the House flag are at the discretion of each Shipowner, provided always that it does not resemble a flag used by the Ships of the State. All British Merchant Ships, on the other hand, are required to carry the Red Ensign, as it is termed, being the Union Jack in the hoist of a large red flag, as the national flag under which they sail. The House flag takes the place of the ancient flag of the port from which the vessel hailed, but its use is strictly subordinated to that of carrying the red ensign as the national colour.

Certain States entitled only to a Mercantile
Flag.

§ 196. There are cases in which the right of a State to a flag for its merchant marine on the High Seas has been recognised under a General Treaty of the European Powers, whilst by the same Treaty the same State has been precluded from fitting out any vessel of war or using a flag of war on the High Seas. Such for instance is the provision made in the Treaty of Berlin of 1878 with regard to the Principality of Montenegro, of which the territory, formerly an enclave within the Turkish dominions without any outlet to the High Sea, is now placed in direct communication with the Adriatic through the cession on the part of Turkey of Antivari and all the Littoral between Antivari and the Dalmatian coast. In this instance, however, under the provisions of the same treaty the port of Antivari and all the Montenegrin Littoral are declared to be closed against the war-vessels of all Nations, whilst Austria-Hungary has undertaken to maintain a maritime and sanitary police within Montenegrin waters, and to accord to the mercantile flag of Montenegro the protection of her Consular Officers. On the other hand, under the Convention of Paris of 5 Nov. 1815, between Great Britain, Austria, Russia, and Prussia, the contracting parties acknowledged the trading flag of the United States of the Ionian Islands to be the flag of a free and independent State, whilst all the ports and harbours of the said States were declared to be with respect to honorary and military rights within British jurisdiction for the more effectual furtherance of the Protection of His Britannic Majesty, under which the Ionian States were placed. Further, under the Constitutional Charter of the United Ionian States drawn up in pursuance of the Convention of 1815, Ionian Subjects were declared to be entitled in all ports whatsoever to the fullest protection of British Consuls. It deserves remark that in both these cases there were maritime ports, from which Ionian and Montenegrin merchant vessels could respectively be set forth and whither they could return, if it should be necessary for the State under whose flag they sailed to exercise its jurisdiction over the captain and crew in civil or criminal matters, for whilst the flag gave them protection, it also imposed upon them responsibility. Besides, merchant ships of olden time were for the most part owned in shares, and all controversies as to their employment and the profits of each voyage had to be settled by the law of the place where the part-owners were resident, and the law of the place could not well be enforced unless the vessel was within the jurisdiction of its Courts. The use of a mercantile flag under treaty-arrangements of the kind above mentioned, although exceptional, was not at variance with the principles of the common law. For instance, the Free Cities of the late Germanic Confederation, such as Hamburg, Bremen, and Lübeck, which possessed either riverain or maritime ports, had a considerable marine under a mercantile flag, but had no maritime flag of war nor any military marine. The same remark applies to certain northern States of the same Confederation, such as Oldenburg, Mecklenburg, and Hanover.

The practice in all these instances was no doubt a relic of an older order of things, in which the merchant vessels of the Cities and States in question had been accustomed to regard the military flag of the Roman Emperor of the Germans as the flag of the Suzerain Power, who would be ready to protect the commerce of his vassals in time of war. The same observation is also applicable to certain tributary States of the Ottoman Empire, such for instance as Samos, which has a mercantile flag in the present day, and such as were the Moldo-Walachian Principalities under the Treaty of St. Petersburg of 29 Jan. 1834 (supr., p. 134). Egypt also seems to have a mercantile flag of her own⁷⁶, slightly distinguished from the Turkish mercantile flag, but Egypt is bound to hoist exclusively the military flag of Turkey on her war-vessels, if she should at any time with the express permission of the Sultan fit out any such vessels. In all these cases there has been a protecting Power or a Suzerain in reserve, whose military fleet would be available for the defence of the mercantile marine of the protected State or of the tributary State, as the case might be, and no city or State appears to have used a mercantile flag unless it possessed a port in the High Seas, or on a navigable river by which its vessels could pass to or from the High Seas.

⁷⁶ In the case of the Charkier Steamship, the property of his Highness Ismail Pacha, Khedive of Egypt, against which a suit for damage was brought in the High Court of Admiralty of England, it was pleaded in the Protest against the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court, that the steamship was a ship of the Egyptian branch of the Imperial Ottoman Navy, and was entitled to carry and did use and carry the Ottoman Naval Pendant and the Ottoman Naval Ensign, which are used by all ships of the Egyptian navy, as distinguished from Egyptian merchant vessels. Law Reports, Admiralty and Ecclesiastical Cases, vol. iv. p. 61.

§ 197. A question has been raised in the present day whether a State, which has no port in the High Seas nor any riverain port in direct communication with the High Seas, can rightfully authorise her citizens to hoist a national flag upon vessels, of which they have acquired the ownership by purchase or otherwise in a foreign port. The question was raised before the Federal Assembly of Switzerland in 1864 on the petition of certain Swiss citizens resident in Trieste in concert with other Swiss citizens resident in Smyrna and in Hamburg and in St. Petersburg, who were desirous to be authorised to hoist Swiss colours upon certain merchant vessels, which they proposed to purchase abroad. Various difficulties at once suggested themselves. The petitioners anticipated that the Swiss Flag would be respected on the High Seas by all belligerent vessels as a neutral flag, and that Swiss merchant vessels would be entitled to circulate everywhere without being subject to any restriction on the part of belligerents by reason of the neutrality of Switzerland. It is hardly necessary to observe that the Conventional Neutrality of the

Project of a Swiss Mercantile
Flag.

Helvetic Confederation is territorial, and that a Swiss citizen, when he quits the territory of the Confederation, carries with him no personal privilege of neutrality any more than a personal obligation not to enter into the military service of a Belligerent Power. During the recent civil war in North America a Swiss citizen claimed the privilege of exporting cotton from a blockaded port of the Southern States in two vessels carrying the Swiss Flag, which he maintained to be entitled to pass outwards without restriction in virtue of the neutral character of the Swiss Confederation, but the cruisers of the Union captured his vessels, and the Federal Council of the Swiss Confederation declined to intervene on his behalf with the Government of the United States of America with a view to obtain the release of the captured vessels. Another difficulty in the case of Switzerland was founded on the physical condition of the territory of the Confederation, that it has no sea-port, and although two great Rivers of Europe have their respective sources in Swiss territory, namely the Rhine and the Rhone, no sea going vessels can ascend by either of these rivers to a Swiss port, from which it would be entitled to hail, if it were met with on the High Seas by a belligerent cruiser. Two modern writers on International Law have discussed the question involved in the Swiss Project, whether an inland State is entitled to a maritime flag for mercantile purposes. M. Charles Calvo⁷⁶ maintains the affirmative, when he says, "Les Etats qui ne sont pas situés au bord de la mer ont, comme les Etats Maritimes, le droit d'avoir une marine et un pavillon spécial, car on ne saurait contraindre une Nation à se servir de navires étrangers pour les besoins de son commerce. Ainsi en Suisse il a été dernièrement question de la création d'un pavillon maritime; rien ne s'opposait en droit; l'utilité pratique de la mesure peut seule être mise en doute." The observations of Professor Pasquale Fiore⁷⁷ on the same subject are very much to the same purpose: "La Svizzera voleva esercitare il diritto d'inalberare la bandiera marittima per la giusta ragione che esso è uno dei diritti di sovranità, e che nell' alto mare non può essere negato ad uno Stato di esercitare quei diritti, che non ledono la libertà del mare, e la libera navigazione. Certamente discutendo intorno al diritto astratto, era ben fondato quello che domandava quel Governo; nel fatto però dove abbandonare le sue pretese, perchè si ebbe con ragione a considerare che il diritto de coprire le proprie navi con la bandiera dello Stato suppone un complesso di condizioni di fatto necessarie per goderne, e alle quali non si può supplere con la volontà."

⁷⁶ Le Droit International, par M. Charles Calvo, 3^{me} édition, Paris, 1880, tom. 2. p. 113.

It may be gathered from the message transmitted from the Federal Council to the Federal Assembly of the Confederation⁷⁸, that in the case of Swiss-owned Steam Vessels plying on the Lake of Geneva or of Constance or on the Lago Maggiore between Swiss ports and French or German or Italian ports, as the case may be, the Captain is allowed to hoist a Swiss flag; and it is mentioned in the same message that when the Swiss Envoy to Japan entered the Port of Nagasaki his vessel hoisted the Swiss flag, to which due respect was paid by the vessels of the Maritime ⁷⁷ Trattato di Diritto Internazionale Pubblico, par Pasquale Fiore, Torino, 1879, vol. i. p. 324.

⁷⁸ Message du Conseil Fédéral

à la Haute Assemblée Fédérale concernant l'autorisation de faire usage du pavillon Fédéral (du 25 Novembre, 1864).

Powers then at anchor there in accordance with the rules that regulate the maritime Ceremonial of the Flag. Further, it appears that Switzerland has been invited to adhere to the Declaration of Paris on the subject of Maritime Warfare, and she has replied to the invitation in the affirmative. A Report was subsequently presented to the National Council of the Confederation on 13 Dec. 1864. The Message and the Report were both in favour of the Right of the Confederation to authorise Swiss citizens to use a mercantile flag on the High Seas, and also to grant Ship-papers to such Swiss citizens as should become owners of merchant ships navigating the High Seas, but as the Confederation had not as yet any Code of Maritime Law, the National Assembly ultimately rejected the project, and nothing further has been heard of it.

The Jerusalem or Terra
Santa Flag.

§ 198. In the Message of the Federal Council above mentioned there occurs the following passage: "Il y a plusieurs Etats, qui exploitent la navigation sous leur propre pavillon sans toucher immédiatement à la mer. Aujourd'hui encore le pavillon de Jérusalem est généralement reconnu sur mer, bien que ce soit une ville d'intérieur. Si nous sommes bien informés, c'est le Prieur de Jérusalem, qui accorde l'autorisation de faire usage du Pavillon."

The flag in question, which is styled the Flag of Jerusalem, is also known by the title of the Flag of the Holy Land (la Terra Santa), and amongst the sailors of the Levant is often spoken of as "The Five Cross Flag." It is however generally entered in the Custom House books of the ports of the Levant as the Flag of Jerusalem, inasmuch as the Letters Patent, which vouch the flag, are signed by the Prior of the Latin Convents in Jerusalem, or by the Latin Patriarch or an equivalent Officer of the Latin Church in the Holy City. The flag is in fact a large Red Cross on a White Field, with a small red cross in each of the four angles between the limbs of the Central Cross, and it is the same flag which is hoisted on the Latin Convents in Jerusalem. The origin of the flag is somewhat obscure, but the privileges to which it entitles a vessel in the ports of Syria and in other ports under the Sultan's dominion are considerable, and it is said to be granted only to French subjects, or at least exclusively to persons who are not Ottoman subjects. There is a circumstance, which might lead us to suppose that some mention of this flag would be found in the Treaties between the Sultan and the Kings of France, inasmuch as a vessel under this flag is treated by the Turkish authorities in every respect as a French vessel; the business of such a vessel in a Turkish port is transacted by the French Consul; the port dues are paid according to the French tariff, and all the maritime documents are made out in the French language; but there is no mention of any such flag in any of the treaties or capitulations between the Kings of France and the Ottoman Porte, of which the text has been made public. There is however a document, of which the text has not been published, as far as we are aware, and which is preserved in the Archives of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Paris⁷⁹, in which some allusion to this flag may possibly be found, namely,

⁷⁹ The Baron J. de Testa, in his Recueil des Traités de la Porte Ottomane, Tom. I. p. 22, says, "Le plus ancien document officiel Turc que nous connaissons à Paris se trouve aux Archives de l'Empire. C'est l'original de la lettre adressée en Sept. 1528, par Suléyman I. à François I. Il est conservé dans l'armoire de fer, où est gardé aussi le firman de 1604 en faveur des Religieux de Jérusalem, lequel n'est toutefois qu'une copie authentique de l'original."

the Firman granted by the Sultan Ahmed I. in 1604 to "Les Religieux de Jérusalem." The French authorities however consider the flag to be three or four centuries old, in which case it would seem to be in the nature of a House Flag of the Latin Convents, to which certain privileges have been attached in olden time in order to facilitate their procuring supplies ; and as the Latin Convents were and are under French Protection, it is intelligible that vessels carrying the flag of the Latin Convents should also be under French Protection, and as such be entitled to the good offices of the French Consuls in all the ports of the Ottoman Empire. This view of the origin of the flag derives support from the fact that packages intended for the Latin Convents in Jerusalem and marked with "the Five Crosses" pass through the Ottoman Custom Houses in the present day duty free. The flag is in fact equivalent to a free pass, and the privilege of permitting it to be used is a source of revenue to the Prior of the Latin Convents. It has no claim to be regarded as a National Flag, for as already said, it is granted only to persons who are not Ottoman Subjects, and accordingly the recognition of such a flag in Ottoman Ports has but a very slight bearing upon the question, which was under the consideration of the Federal Council of the Swiss Confederation in 1864.

CHAPTER XII.

RIGHT OF LEGATION.

Origin of Legations—The Person of an Ambassador sacred—The Right of Legation an Imperfect Right—Reception of an Ambassador discretionary—Conditional Reception of a Subject as a Foreign Minister—Various Orders of Diplomatic Agents—Classification of Public Ministers in the Eighteenth Century—Rule of the Congress of Vienna—Diplomatic Agents of the First Class—Diplomatic Agents of the Second Class—Diplomatic Agents of the Third and the Fourth Class—Resident Missions—Moldavian and Walachian Chargés d’Affaires formerly at the Ottoman Porte—Letters of Credence—Letters of Recommendation—Full Powers—Instructions—Cereemonial of Reception—The Sacred Character of an Ambassador—His Ex-Territoriality—Ex-Territoriality of the Ambassador’s Hotel and of his Suite—The Ambassador’s Jurisdiction over the personnel of the Embassy—Liability of an Ambassador to the Payment of Local Dues—Liberty of Religious Worship—Inviolability of an Ambassador passing through the Territory of a Third Power—Consuls not Diplomatic Agents.

§ 199. NATIONS, being independent political communities not acknowledging any Political Superior, hold intercourse with one another upon terms of equality, and upon the presumption of mutual good faith. But the whole body of a Nation cannot confer with the whole body of another Nation, although the interests of an Independent Political Community may from time to time require it to enter into negotiations with another Independent Political Community, not merely for the purpose of forming special Conventional Relations, but likewise with the object of maintaining its existing relations under the General Law. It thus becomes necessary that a Nation should depute one or more individual members of its Body with full Powers on its behalf to negotiate with another Nation, and it has been the practice of Nations to confide in the good faith of one another, that the Persons of their Representatives shall be in safe-keeping whilst they are within the jurisdiction of the Nation, to which they have been accredited.

Origin of Legations.

The Person of an Ambassador Sacred.

§ 200. The word Ambassador or Embassador is derived by Wicquefort¹ from the Spanish word "Embiar," which signifies "to send." The Latin equivalent was Legatus or *Orator*², and such is the title given by the Roman Emperor of the Germans and by the States General of the Netherlands in their ancient records to their Ambassador accredited to the Ottoman Porte. Much which is found in the Digest of Justinian³ in respect to Legati applies to delegates from the Provinces or Municipia of the Roman Empire, who were sent to the Capital with Commissions to advocate the interests of the Provincial or Municipal Bodies whom they represented. But the principle of Law, regarded as a Rule of Reason promulgated for the common good, which was applied by the Roman Jurists to questions which arose touching Legati of this order, are equally applicable to Ambassadors sent from one Independent State to another, and it is worthy of note that the Romans, who regarded foreigners as out of the pale of the *Jus Civile*⁴, still held that the person of a foreigner was sacred, if he was invested with the representative character of his Nation. "Si quis legatum hostium pulsasset, contra

¹ Wicquefort, L'Ambassadeur et ses Fonctions, L. I. p. 3.

² Bynkershoek, De Foro Legatorum, L. I. c. 1.

³ Dig. XLVIII. Tit. VI. § 7.

⁴ Adversus hostem (peregrinum) æterna auctoritas esto; Law of the Twelve Tables. Gravina, de Jure Naturali, Gentium et XII Tabularum. Lipsiæ, 1737, p. 284.

Jus Gentium id commissum esse existimatur, quia sancti habentur legati ⁵."

§ 201. The Right of Legation forms the first and principal head of the Voluntary Law of Nations in the system of Grotius ⁶. This right belongs only to States which are independent, "qui summi imperii sunt compotes inter se." Every State, which is sui juris, is entitled to constitute a Representative and to accredit him to another State, which is willing to receive him. But a Nation is not obliged to receive a Representative Envoy from another Nation. Grotius holds that the Law of Nations does not require that all Ambassadors should be received, but that they are not to be excluded without just cause, and that such cause may exist either on the part of the person who sends, or the person who is sent. The instances, which Grotius ⁷ cites in illustration of the just causes of refusal, seem to resolve themselves into cases where the Nation which sends the Ambassador is considered to be an enemy, or where the person sent as Ambassador is supposed to be a man of bad faith, or where the Embassy itself is held not to be sent in good faith. Vattel ⁸, on the other hand, holds that a Sovereign cannot without very particular reasons refuse to admit and hear the Minister of a Friendly Power or of a Power with which he is at peace; but if there are good reasons for not admitting him into the heart of the country, the Sovereign may notify to the Minister,

The Right of Legation an Imperfect Right.

⁵ Dig. L. Tit. VII. § 17. De Legationibus. L. II. c. 18. § 1.

⁶ Restat veniamus ad obligationes, quas ipsum per se jus illud Gentium, quod voluntarium dicitur, induxit: quo in genere præcipuum est caput de Jure Legationum. De Jure Belli et Pacis, ⁷ Ibid. L. II. c. 18. § III. 1. Causa esse potest ex eo qui mittit, ex eo qui mittitur, ex eo ob quod mittitur.

⁸ Vattel, Droit des Gens, L. IV. c. 5. § 65.

that he will send proper persons to meet him at an appointed place on the frontier, there to receive his proposals. It then becomes the duty of the Foreign Minister to halt at the place assigned ; it is sufficient that he obtains a hearing, as that is the utmost he has a right to expect. Klüber⁹ considers that no Nation, except under Treaty-engagement to that effect, is bound to receive the Ambassador of another Nation, except when the purpose of the Mission is either to discuss or establish a Right contested by the other Nation, and the object in view cannot be attained in any other manner, or to terminate in an amicable way a dispute occasioned by an evident violation of Right on the part of the Nation to which the Mission is sent. Ch. De Martens¹⁰ concurs with Klüber as to the cases in which alone a Nation is bound to receive an Embassy from another Nation. Wheaton¹¹, on the other hand, holds that "no State is obliged by the Positive Law of Nations to send or receive public Ministers, although the Usage and Comity of Nations seem to have established a reciprocal duty in that respect. It is evident, however, that this cannot be more than an imperfect obligation, and must be modified by the nature and importance of the relations to be maintained between different States by means of Diplomatic intercourse."

Reception of an Ambassador discre-
tional.

§ 202. As a Nation is not under any perfect obligation to receive an Ambassador, it may annex such conditions as it pleases to his reception, short of anything affecting his personal inviolability. A Nation may refuse to receive a particular individual who has been accredited to it by another Nation, and instances of such refusal are by no means infrequent¹³. It is usual in the present day in order to avoid any misunderstanding, which might arise from the refusal of a Nation to receive the Envoy of another Nation on the ground of a personal objection, to intimate beforehand the name of the person whom it is proposed to accredit. This is an act of courtesy on the part of the Nation which makes the communication, but the practice is in itself reasonable and ought to be upheld; for if a diplomatic Envoy is not welcome to the Sovereign to whom he is sent, he cannot be expected to gain his confidence, and, unless he enjoys a certain amount of Personal consideration, his Public Character alone will fail to secure him that confidence.)

⁹ Klüber, Droit des Gens, § 176.

¹⁰ Guide Diplomatique, Tom. I. § 6.

¹¹ Elements, Part III. c. 1. § 2.

§ 203. A Nation may refuse to receive one of its own citizens as the Representative of a Foreign Power, and in some countries it is a State-Maxim that a Subject is not to be received in such a capacity. Such was the rule of the French¹⁴ and Swedish¹⁴ Courts, and likewise of the United Provinces¹⁵. But in recent times two French subjects have been accredited to and received by the French Court as the Representative Ministers of Foreign Powers, Count Pozzo di Borgo as Minister of Russia, and the Count de Bray as Minister of Bavaria. Ch. de Martens¹⁶ speaks of both these distinguished Diplomats as having been naturalised in the foreign countries which they respectively represented. This circumstance would

Conditional Reception of a Subject as a Foreign Minister,

¹³ Thus the King of Sweden refused in 1758 to receive Mr. Goderich, the British Envoy, who was thereupon under the necessity of returning home. So the King of Sardinia refused in 1792 to receive M. Semonville the Envoy from France.

¹⁴ De Caillieres, Traité de la

Manière de négocier avec les Souverains, c. 6. p. 72.

¹⁵ Codex Legum Sueciæ, Tit. de Crimin. § 7.

¹⁶ Bynkershoek, de Foro Legatorum, c. 11.

¹⁷ Guide Diplomatique, Tom. I. c. 11. § 6.

tend to prevent all conflict in their case between the International Privileges of a Foreign Ambassador and the Civil Liabilities of a Natural-born Subject of the French Crown, inasmuch as it is provided by the Municipal Law of France that the quality of a Frenchman is lost by Naturalisation acquired in a foreign country¹⁷. A similar rule of Law obtains in most countries, but Great Britain was an exception, as before 1870 she did not allow a Natural-born Subject to renounce or discharge his allegiance to the Crown of Great Britain and Ireland under any circumstances¹⁸. "Nemo potest exuere patriam" was an Imperial maxim, which British tribunals strictly upheld. But under the Naturalisation Act, 1870, (33 Vict. ch. 14,) a British subject, on becoming naturalised in a foreign State, now loses his British national character.

It seems open to question, if a Sovereign Power has consented to receive, as the Representative of a foreign Nation, one of its own Natural-born Subjects without any express reservation of its Sovereign authority over him, and in a case in which such authority has not been divested under some general provision of its Municipal law, whether such an unconditional reception is not a waiver of all authority, which it might otherwise assert over him on the ground of his origin. Wheaton inclines to think that the unconditional reception of a Subject in the character of a Representative of a foreign Nation is a waiver of all personal jurisdiction over him on the ¹⁷ La qualité de Français se perdra par la naturalisation acquise en pays étranger. Code Civil, Art. 17.

¹⁸ Blackstone's Commentaries,

Tom. II. c. 135. This is a relic of the period when the conception of "territorial Sovereignty" was imperfectly developed.

part of the Sovereign who has received him¹⁹. Sir Robert Phillimore²⁰ is of opinion that if a Subject be received without any previously promulgated stipulation upon the part of his own Sovereign who receives him, he will be entitled to the full Jus legationis. Vattel in discussing this question says, that "a Natural-born Subject of a State may, without renouncing his country for ever, become independent of it during the whole time that he spends in the service of a foreign Prince;" and the presumption is certainly in favour of such independence, for the Status and Functions of a Public Minister naturally require, that he should depend only on his Master or the Prince who has intrusted him with the management of his affairs. Whenever, therefore, there does not exist any circumstance which furnishes a proof or indication to the contrary, a Foreign Minister, though antecedently a Subject of the State to which he is accredited, is reputed to be absolutely independent of it during the whole time of his Commission. If his original Sovereign does not choose to allow him such independence within his dominions, he may refuse to admit him in the character of a Foreign Minister²¹.

§ 204. In the early intercourse of European Nations a distinction of title amongst Diplomatic Agents was unknown. They were indifferently styled in Latin documents Legati or Oratores, and in more modern records they are designated Ambassadeurs, Ambasciadori, or Embascadores, respectively in French, Italian, and Spanish records. Grotius treats of Legati under a single head. The vanity of Princes in regard to Cere-

Various Orders of Diplomatic Agents.

¹⁹ Elements, Part III. c. 1. § 15.

²⁰ Commentaries, Tom. II. c. 135.

²¹ Droit des Gens, L. IV. c. 8. § 112.

morial on the one hand, and motives of parsimony on the other, contributed to introduce a distinction in or about the 15th Century between Diplomatic Agents who should represent the personal dignity as well as the sovereign rights of their Sovereign, and diplomatic agents who should represent the affairs alone of the Sovereign who accredited them. Louis XI of France is said to have been the first of the European Sovereigns who accredited to another Sovereign Power a Public Minister to represent him in the conduct of his affairs only, and not in respect of his personal dignity; and his example led the way to the introduction of two distinct classes of diplomatic Agents, a higher class representing the dignity of the person of their Constituent as well as his affairs, and a lower class simply representing him in the transaction of his affairs.

At the time when Vattel wrote his work on the Law of Nations a third degree of Representation had become established by Custom, and Vattel divides accordingly the Diplomatic Body into Ambassadors, Envoys, and Residents. In the Treaty of Peace concluded at Passarowitz²⁰ between the Emperor Charles VI and the Sultan Ahmed III (anno 1718) we find mention of three classes of Public Ministers as distinguished from the simple Agent²¹, the latter of whom, if his functions were not commercial, was included in the protection of the same Treaty-stipulations which guaranteed the personal safety of other Public Ministers.

²⁰ Ministri porro Cesarei, sive Oratoris, sive Ablegati, sive Residentis, sive Agentis munere fungantur. Schmauss, Corp. Jur. Gent. Academ. p. 1703.

²¹ In the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation concluded at the same time and place between the same Powers, Agents are mentioned in the list of Officials connected with Commerce: pariter Consules, Vice-Consules, Agentes, Factores, Interpretes. Schmauss, p. 1717.

It is not easy to ascertain the precise line of demarcation, which distinguished the functions of the Resident from those of the Envoy, for the third class of Diplomatic Agents was more frequently entrusted with the negotiation of affairs of State than the Envoy; but the office of Resident seems to have been held in less honour and consideration than that of Envoy, and it was frequently delegated to a subject of the State, to which the Resident was accredited. The title of Resident appears also to have been sometimes conferred upon persons who were only entrusted with the management of the private affairs of a Sovereign. The functions of the simple Agent on the other hand seem to have been originally very indefinite. Vattel speaks of him as having been formerly a kind of public Minister; but the title of Agent in Vattel's time had come in practice to be confined to persons appointed by Princes exclusively to transact their private affairs, and who were not unfrequently subjects of the Country where they resided. Such Agents are not the bearers of Letters of Credence properly speaking, and they are consequently not Public Ministers, nor under the protection of the Law of Nations, as such. Residents also appear sometimes not to have been furnished with Letters of Credence, and under such circumstances the title alone of Resident was no protection to them. This may serve as an explanation of the fact alluded to by Bynkershoek²², that Wicquefort, who was a native of Amsterdam, was in the military service of the States General at the time when he was appointed the Resident of the Duke of Luneburg at the Hague. Wicquefort, notwithstanding his office of Resident, was cited before a Dutch Court and condemned to imprisonment for life. Bynkershoek holds that the office of Resident did not, under the Law of Nations, exempt Wicquefort from the jurisdiction of the Dutch Courts. The Office of Resident, as exercised in his case, seems to have differed very little from the office of a Consul or Commercial Agent, for Vattel²³ speaks of "Dutch Merchants who obtain the title of Residents of certain foreign Princes, and nevertheless continue to carry on their commerce, thereby sufficiently denoting that they remain subjects of the States General."

²² De Foro Legatorum, c. 11.

Classification of Public Ministers in the 18th Century.

§ 205. The Law of Nations, antecedently to the institution of permanent Foreign Missions at the different European Courts, did not recognise any distinction of Class or Order amongst Public Ministers. Each Minister or Envoy received such special consideration as the nature of his Mission entitled him to. But with the introduction of permanent missions, a question of Ceremonial and Precedence arose amongst the Representatives of Foreign Sovereigns at each Court. The Ambassador was received with higher honours, and took precedence of the Envoy. The Envoy, on the other hand, had precedence of the Resident; the Resident in his turn, being a Public Minister, took precedence of the Agent, whose duties were confined to the private affairs of his Sovereign. Such and so many were the grades of the diplomatic hierarchy at the commencement of the Eighteenth Century. The Agent has for the most part disappeared, and is replaced by the Chargé d'Affaires, but the French mission in Spain still retains amongst the personnel of its establishment an Agent of the French Nation, who is charged with the conduct of the affairs of his countrymen, which are of a secondary order ²⁴.

²³ Vattel, L. IV. c. 8. § 112.

In the course of the Eighteenth Century a practice was introduced of accrediting public Ministers without any particular designation of rank or character. Vattel ²⁵ states that this expedient was adopted to avoid dispute about precedence. Custom had at such time established a particular Ceremonial for the Ambassador, the Envoy, and the Resident, but such custom did not altogether prevent disputes between the Ministers of different Princes accredited to the same Court, as to their respective rank and precedence; more particularly when they happened to belong to the same Class or Order. Thus the Ambassador of an Emperor might claim to take precedence of the Ambassador of a King, by reason of the precedence which the Emperor himself claimed over all Kings. A King, on the other hand, might be indisposed to allow his Ambassador to concede precedence to the Ambassador of an Emperor, yet he might be equally indisposed to incur the risk of hostilities with the Emperor. Under such circumstances by accrediting his own Minister under the simple and indeterminate title of Minister, he could allow him to concede precedence to the Ambassador of an Emperor without compromising the dignity of his Crown.

We thus find the title of Minister Plenipotentiary introduced, such Minister Plenipotentiary taking rank immediately after an Ambassador. The office of Minister Plenipotentiary came gradually to be united with that of Envoy Extraordinary, and was placed in the same rank. Ministers Resident and Ministers Chargés d'Affaires shortly afterwards completed the ²⁴ Ch. de Martens, Guide Diplomatique, Tom. I. § 12.

²⁵ Droit des Gens, L. IV. § 74.

Catalogue, which we find in general acceptance at the commencement of the Nineteenth Century.

Rule of the Congress of Vienna.

§ 206. The precise rank and precedence however of Diplomatic Agents was not a matter universally agreed upon amongst the Nations of Europe, until the Powers assembled in Congress at Vienna came to a common understanding on the subject, and established Three Classes ²⁶:

1. Ambassadors, Legates or Nuncios.
2. Envoys, Ministers, and others accredited to Sovereigns, (auprès des Souverains.)
3. Chargés d'Affaires accredited to Ministers of Foreign Affairs.

This classification proceeded upon a very intelligible distinction between the functions exercised by each Class. The Ambassador is accredited by a Sovereign to a Sovereign, and represents the personal dignity of his Constituent, as well as the public affairs of the Nation over which his Constituent rules. The Envoy or Minister is similarly accredited by a Sovereign to a Sovereign, but he represents only the affairs of the Nation over which his Constituent rules. The Chargé d'Affaires is not accredited by the Sovereign to the Sovereign, but is accredited by the Minister of Foreign Affairs to the Minister of Foreign Affairs. At the subsequent Congress of Aix-la-Chapelle, (21 Nov. 1818,) the five Great Powers there assembled agreed to institute a Class intermediate between the Envoy and the Chargé d'Affaires, to which they gave the title of Ministers Resident accredited to Sovereigns. The distinction thus introduced was not very logical, seeing that the extent of the second Class remained the same, and that the second is sufficiently large to include the third. The reasons for the introduction of this intermediate Class may be traced to the unwillingness of the Great Continental Powers to allow their Ministers of the Second Class to give way to the Ministers of the same Class who represented the Minor Powers of Germany, and who might be entitled by Seniority, agreeably to the regulations of the Congress of Vienna, to take precedence of the Envoys of the Great Powers. The introduction of a Third Class under the title of Ministers Resident, accredited to Sovereigns, enabled the Minor Powers to avoid all contest with the Great Powers, and at the same time to have the services of Diplomatic Agents who were Public Ministers properly speaking.

²⁶ Règlement sur le rang entre les Agens Diplomatiques, being annexed to the Final Act of the Congress. Martens, N. R. II. p. 449.

§ 207. Diplomatic Agents of the first class alone enjoy by the Custom of Nations, as well as under the regulations of the Congress of Vienna, the full attributes of the Representative Character. They are accordingly entitled to the same honours as would be paid to the person of the Sovereign, whom they respectively represent. The precise nature of the Ceremonial, to which Ambassadors are entitled, depends upon the usage of the particular State to which they are accredited. It was provided by the fifth of the Rules adopted at the Congress of Vienna, that each State should settle an uniform mode of reception for Diplomatic Agents of each Class, so that the discretion of each State is left unfettered, provided it is not guilty of partiality towards the Representative of any one State. The third of the same rules provided, that Diplomatic Agents on an extraordinary Mission should not by reason thereof (à ce titre) enjoy any superiority of rank; so that the

Diplomatic Agents of the First Class.

Ambassador Extraordinary can claim no privilege or precedence over the Ordinary Ambassador. The Papal Nuncio²⁷ at present takes his place amongst the Ambassadors in the order of Seniority, as it is provided by the fourth of the same rules, that Diplomatic Agents of the same Class shall take rank and precedence according to the date of the official notification of their arrival at the Court to which they are accredited.

The practice of accrediting Diplomatic Agents of the first Class is confined to the States which are entitled to Royal Honours. Such Honours were formerly enjoyed exclusively by Monarchical States, and the Republics of Venice and of the United Netherlands were for some time exceptional instances of such honours being shared by States not having a Monarchical form of Government; at the same time, the Ambassadors of these powerful Republics were accustomed to yield precedence to the Representatives of Crowned Heads²⁸. The Grand Duchies of Germany, the Electorate of Hesse, and the Germanic Confederation, were European States entitled to Royal Honours, and they were accordingly entitled to accredit Diplomatic Agents of the first Class. The rank and precedence of Sovereign Princes are not determined by any Conventional rule analogous to that which determines the rank and precedence of their Diplomatic Agents; but amongst Sovereign Princes entitled to Royal Honours, the custom prevails for such, as have not the title of Emperor or King, to concede precedence on all occasions to ²⁷ The Ambassadors of the Roman Catholic Princes, including the Roman Emperor of the Germans, were accustomed in former times to cede precedence to the Papal Nuncio, but those of Russia and the Ottoman Porte did not recognise any such rule.

²⁸ Vattel, Droit des Gens, L. II. § 38. Klüber, § 91.

Emperors and Kings. There existed in Europe, before the establishment of the German Empire in 1871, several Independent Princes who did not enjoy Royal Honours; such, for instance, as the Members of the Germanic Confederation below the rank of Grand Duke or Elector. These yielded precedence to Princes entitled to Royal Honours. There are also European States which enjoy an Independence modified by Treaties, such as Monaco and San Marino. Such States rank after all the States which enjoy an absolute Independence, and under the provisions of the Conventions, by which their Independence is modified, are represented for all political purposes by the Diplomatic Agents of the Protecting Power. The rules of precedence, which are observed amongst Independent Sovereign Powers, rest upon Usage and general acquiescence. The question of determining the relative rank of Independent States by a positive Compact, was taken into consideration at the Congress of Vienna; but difficulties having arisen in regard to the rank to be assigned to the Great Republics²⁹, the further discussion of the question was adjourned indefinitely, and the Con-

²⁹ The title of courtesy of a Great Republic, such as Venice and Genoa, was Serenissima Respublica. A similar title is in the present day assigned to Confederations. Thus the Germanic Confederation was addressed by the title of "the Most Serene," and Diplomatic Agents were accredited to the Most Serene Sovereign Princes and Free Cities of the Germanic Confederation. Titles of a Religious character, originally conferred by the Holy See, are still used in addressing certain Sovereign Princes. Thus the titles of the Very Christian or Most Christian King and Firstborn Son of the Church, are given to the Kings of France; the King of Spain has been styled, since 1496, the Catholic King; the Kings of England, since 1591, Defenders of the Faith; the King of Poland, the Orthodox King; the King of Portugal, since 1748, the Very Faithful King; the King of Hungary, since 1758, the Apostolic King.

gress limited its action to the regulation of the rank and precedence of the Diplomatic Agents of Independent States ³⁰.

Diplomatic Agents of the Second Class.

§ 208. The second Order of Diplomatic Agents includes Envoys, Envoys Extraordinary, Ministers Plenipotentiary, and Internuncios ³¹. Diplomatic Agents of the second Class are not clothed with the peculiar character which attaches to diplomatic Agents of the first Class, and which is derived from the dignity of the Sovereign whom they represent. Accordingly, they cannot demand of right a personal audience of the Sovereign to whom they are accredited. Such a Right is the distinctive privilege of a Diplomatic Agent of the first Class. In all other matters which concern him, as the Mandatary of his Nation, a diplomatic agent of the second Class does not differ in any material respect from a Diplomatic Agent of the first Class. There was a period when the etiquette of European Courts confined the privilege of personal intercourse with the Sovereign, at whose Court he was accredited, to an Ambassador as distinguished from an Envoy, but the usage of the present day authorises Diplomatic Agents of the second Class to confer personally on suitable occasions with the Sovereign to whom they are accredited. The privilege of personal intercourse with the Sovereign in the case of an Ambassador was not at any time considered to give to verbal conferences with the Sovereign the character of Official acts binding

³⁰ Klüber, Droit des Gens, § 94.

³¹ The Austrian Internuncio at Constantinople took precedence formerly, under treaties with the Ottoman Porte, of all Ministers of the Second Order.

The regulation of the Congress of Vienna is now observed by the Porte. Ch. de Martens, Guide Diplomatique, c. 10. § 65. Comte du Gardien, Traité Complet de Diplomatie, L. 5. § 3.

upon his government. International Negotiations were then, as now, conducted through a Minister of Foreign Affairs, and it was through him alone that binding Official acts could be concluded by an Ambassador. In the present day the observation is still more generally applicable, as wherever the Monarchical form of Government is combined with Representative institutions, the Sovereign can only bind the Nation through the agency of a Responsible Minister³².

§ 209. The third Order of Diplomatic Agents comprises Ministers, Resident Ministers, Residents, Ministers Chargés d'Affaires. The distinction between the Minister Chargé d'Affaires, and the simple Chargé d'Affaires, who ranks in the fourth Class of Diplomatic Agents, consists in the circumstance that the former is accredited by the Sovereign to the Sovereign as Minister, the title of Minister being engrafted upon that of Chargé d'Affaires³³. Martens cites as an early example of this particular species of Diplomatic Agent, the Minister Chargé d'Affaires of the King of Sweden accredited to the Padichah of the Ottomans in 1784³⁴. The fourth Order consists of Diplomatic Agents accredited by the Minister of Foreign Affairs to the Minister of Foreign Affairs. These are either sent out originally with express Credentials from the Minister of Foreign Affairs as Chargés d'Affaires, or have been sent out originally furnished with a Commission from the Sovereign, as Secretaries of Embassy or Secretaries of Legation; and in the latter case they are orally invested with the Charge of the Embassy or Legation by the Ambassador or Minister himself reign are necessary to give to the Chargé d'Affaires the character of Minister ad interim.

Diplomatic Agents of the Third and the Fourth Class.

³² Envoys as distinguished from Ambassadors, (Oratores or Legati,) are designated in Latin, Inviati or Ablegati.

³⁴ Précis du Droit des Gens, T. II. § 194.

³³ Credentials from the Sove-to be exercised during his absence from the seat of his mission. They are accordingly announced in this character by him before his departure to the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Court to which he is accredited. This fourth Order of Diplomatic Agent is not entitled to confer with the Chief of the State, but only with the Minister of Foreign Affairs to whom he is accredited, and this rule is maintained in the case of Republics, as well as of Monarchical States. Wheaton cites an instance from the Archives of the United States, in which the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs notified formally to the Chargé d'Affaires of an European Power of the highest rank, that "he could hold official intercourse only with a Department of State ; that he had no right to converse with the President on matters of business, and might consider it a liberal courtesy, if he was presented to him at all ³⁵." Consuls, as such, are Commercial not Political Agents, and accordingly do not belong to any of the four Orders of Diplomatic Agents, but the office of Chargé d'Affaires is sometimes combined with that of Consul-General in the same individual, who has thus the character of a Diplomatic Agent engrafted upon the Commercial character of Consul.

Resident Missions.

§ 210. Every Nation may determine for itself in what character it will accredit a Diplomatic Agent, whether it will confer upon him, by its Credentials, the full Representative character which belongs to the Ambassador or highest class of Diplomatic Agent, or will only confer upon him limited rank. But this absolute discretion upon the part of a Nation to accredit its Diplomatic Agents under any character

³⁵ Elements, Part III. c. 1. § 6. receives Ambassadors and other
The President, under the Con- public Ministers.
stitution of the United States, which it may choose, is limited to occasional and temporary Missions, as distinguished from Missions permanently resident at a Foreign Court. No Nation can insist as a matter of Right, that a Diplomatic Agent on its behalf shall be permanently entertained by another Nation. Grotius³⁶ held that Permanent Legations (assiduæ legationes) might be with right excluded by all Nations, but the practice to maintain Resident Legations at Foreign Courts had in the course of the following century become so general amongst the European Nations, that Vattel³⁷, whilst holding that a Nation is not under an obligation to suffer at all times the residence of a Foreign Minister, is of opinion, that any Nation, which refuses to entertain a Resident Minister from a Foreign Power, must allege very good reasons for its conduct in this respect, if it wishes to avoid giving offence. Such reasons may arise from particular circumstances, but there are also ordinary reasons which may be always in force, such as relate to the constitution of a Government and the State of a Nation. In the absence however of any such reason, the Usage of two centuries may now be said to justify the Nations of Europe in relying upon the Comity of one another to entertain permanently their duly accredited Diplomatic Agents. As the same Usage, however, requires in regard to Resident Missions, that Nations should accredit and receive Diplomatic Agents of equal rank, the special rank of the Diplomatic Agents to be accredited and entertained on either side must be a subject of mutual agreement between States. The practice of accrediting and entertaining Ministers of the first Class has been hitherto confined to Crowned Heads, Sovereign Princes enjoying Royal Honours, and the Great Republics. There is no rule which prevents a Nation accrediting several Diplomatic Agents of equal or unequal rank to the same Nation, or the same person as its Diplomatic Agent to several Nations³⁸. On the other hand, the same person may be accredited to the same Court by one Sovereign Prince as his Ambassador, and by another Sovereign Prince as his Envoy Extraordinary, or by both Princes as their Envoy Extraordinary. Thus the Austrian Ambassador used frequently to have separate Credentials to Foreign Courts, as Envoy Extraordinary of the Duke of Parma. The Prussian Minister in former days had for the most part Credentials from the King of Prussia and from the Grand Duke of Saxe.

³⁶ Optimo autem jure rejici possunt, quæ nunc in usu sunt legationes assiduæ, quibus quam non sit opus docet mos antiquus, cui illæ ignoratæ.—De Jure B. et P. L. II. c. 18. § 3.

³⁷ Droit des Gens, L. 4. § 66.

Moldavian and Wa-lachian Chargés d'Affaires at the Ottoman Porte.

§ 211. Agents for the private affairs of Princes, and such as have only the title of Resident or Counsellor of Legation or Agent, are not members of the Diplomatic Body, in other words, they do not represent their respective Nations for Political Purposes, and they are not entitled to any Diplomatic privilege or immunity. To this class belonged the Chargés d'Affaires of the Hospodars of Moldavia and Walachia, who resided at the Ottoman Porte, and for whom the Emperor of Russia stipulated by the sixteenth Article of the Treaty of Kutschuk Kainardji, (anno 1774³⁹.) that they should be treated by the Porte with kind-

³⁸ It was not an unusual practice for Non-Germanic Powers to accredit one and the same Minister to divers States of the Germanic Confederation.

³⁹ Marten's Recueil, Tom. II. p. 305. Lesquels veilleront aux affaires concernant les dites Principautés, et seront traités avec bonté de la Porte, et non obstant leur peu d'importance considérés comme personnes jouissant du Droit des Gens, c'est à dire à l'abri de toute violence.

ness, and notwithstanding their little importance, should be considered as persons so far enjoying the Right of Nations, as to be safe from personal violence. This was an exceptional case founded altogether on the provisions of a special Convention, whereby the Porte agreed to restrict the exercise of its Rights of Sovereignty over certain of its own Subjects, whilst charged with the functions of Agent on behalf of the Hospodars at the central seat of the Ottoman Government. But this Treaty-engagement did not confer the Diplomatic Character on these Chargés d’Affaires, nor were they received into the body of Diplomatic Agents resident at the Ottoman Porte⁴⁰.

§ 212. A Public Minister, who is sent to represent his Sovereign at the Court of another Sovereign, ought to be expressly authorised for that purpose, and the Sovereign to whom the mission of the Minister is addressed, ought to be duly certified of his authority to present himself as the Representative of his Sovereign. Every Public Minister is accordingly furnished by the Sovereign or Chief of the State, which delegates him, with Letters of Credence, (Litteræ fidei sive credentiales,) which are addressed to the Sovereign or Chief of the State in the case of States which are under a permanent Sovereign or chief Magistrate; but in the case of Unions or Confederations of States, which are for the most part under a temporary Pre-

Letters of Credence.

⁴⁰ These Chargés d’Affaires were properly speaking Agents for the affairs of the Principalities, transacting business with the Home Department at Constantinople. It had been the practice in the Ottoman Empire for the Governors of Provinces to be represented at the Central Seat of Administration by an Agent, (termed in the Turkish language, Kayson Kehagasi,) and as the lives of such agents were always in jeopardy, if a political crisis arose, a stipulation for the safe conduct of the Agents of the two Principalities was introduced into the Treaty of Kutschuk Kainardji.

sident, the letters of Credence are addressed to the States themselves. The reason for this distinction of practice in the case of Unions or Confederations of States is to be found in the circumstance, that as the President of an Union or Confederation is a temporary Officer, if the Credentials of Foreign Ministers were addressed to him, they would have to be renewed as often as a new President was appointed, and serious prejudice to both Nations might result from the frequent interruption of Diplomatic intercourse.

The Letters of Credence set forth the name and special character of the Diplomatic Agent, and the general object of his Mission, and request that he may be received with favour, and have full faith given to what he says on behalf of his Sovereign. They are invariably sealed up, and were formerly secured with silken cord as well as with wax. The modern practice is to enclose the Letters in a sealed envelope. Their form varies with the usage of each Nation. They are for the most part in the form of a Cabinet Letter, (Lettre de Cabinet,) written in the first person and addressed by the Sovereign, who accredits the Minister, to the Sovereign to whom he is accredited, commencing with "My dear Brother" or "My dear Sister," and ending with an affectionate subscription and signature under the hand of the Sovereign. These Letters are sometimes styled Lettres de Cachet, being sealed up with the Cachet seal⁴¹, which is the smallest seal of the Minister of Foreign Affairs. The Letters of Credence of some Sovereigns, as for instance of the Kings of Prussia and Denmark, are countersigned by the Minister of Foreign Affairs. It is not however the practice in Great Britain for the Minister of Foreign ⁴¹ When they are enclosed in an envelope, the envelope is sealed up with the Cachet Seal.

Affairs to countersign Letters of Credence furnished to British Diplomatic Agents. In cases where a more formal ceremony is intended to be observed, the Letters of Credence are in the form of a Lettre de Chancellerie, which is drawn up in the third person, and in which all the titles of both Sovereigns or both States are set forth at length. A Lettre de Chancellerie is generally used when a Sovereign Prince accredits a Diplomatic Agent to a Republic or a Confederation of States, or when a Christian Power accredits a Public Minister to a Mahomedan Prince. Thus Great Britain accredits her Ministers to the United States of America, and to the Emperor of Morocco, in a Lettre de Chancellerie, whilst she accredits her Ambassador to the Emperor of Austria in a Lettre de Cabinet. The Lettre de Chancellerie is written upon a sheet of foolscap paper, and in the case of British Credentials, it bears upon its face the impression of the small signet of the Foreign Secretary stamped upon a wafer⁴². Great Britain has, of late, set examples to other States of simplifying, as much as possible, the Ceremonial of Credentials, but several of the great European Powers, Russia for instance, still continue to employ the Lettre de Chancellerie for the Credentials of her Diplomatic Agents of the three first Orders. In the case of a Diplomatic Agent of the fourth Order, his Letters of Credence are addressed by the Chief of the Department of Foreign Affairs in his own country to the Chief of the corresponding Department in the country to cellerie, and a large seal for wafers, called the large Signet, for the Commissions of Secretaries of Embassy or Legation, and of Consuls.

⁴² The British Foreign Secretary has three Seals, a small Cachet Seal for wax, used for Lettres de Cabinet, an intermediate seal for wafers, called the small Signet, for Lettres de Chan-

which he is accredited. Where a Foreign Minister is accredited to an Emperor or a King, it is usual to furnish him with Letters of Credence of identical import, mutatis mutandis, addressed to the Consort of the King, if she has the title and rank of Empress or Queen⁴³; but if he is accredited to a reigning Empress or Queen, it is not usual to furnish him with additional Letters of Credence addressed to the Prince Consort. It would appear to be the practice of some Governments to furnish their Public Ministers with Letters of Recommendation in addition to their Letters of Credence, addressed by the Sovereign himself, or by his Minister of Foreign Affairs, to distinguished public Functionaries, or to Members of the Government of the State to which the Ministers are accredited. Of this kind were the Letters of Recommendation, with which the Foreign Ministers, accredited by the Christian Powers of Europe to the Ottoman Porte, were formerly furnished, and which were addressed to the Grand Vizier and to the Reis Effendi, in other words to the Ottoman Prime Minister and to the Ottoman Secretary for Foreign Affairs. The practice of furnishing their Diplomatic Agents, who are accredited to the Porte, with Letters of Recommendation, is still observed by some of the European Powers, but Great Britain has discontinued them, and she furnishes her Ambassador to the Porte in the present day only with Letters of Credence,

Letters of Recommendation.

⁴³ In States where Morganatic marriages, or marriages of the Left Hand are recognised as lawful varieties of the matrimonial contract, the wife of the Emperor or King does not necessarily bear the title and rank of Empress or Queen, unless that title and rank have been directly conferred upon her. Thus Frederick IV. of Denmark, contracted a left-handed marriage with a noble Danish Lady during the lifetime of his first Queen, and upon the death of the Queen, the King elevated his left-handed wife to the dignity of Queen.

drawn up in the form of a Lettre de Cabinet, and addressed by the Sovereign in the first person to the Padichah. Great Britain, in so modifying her practice, has been careful to treat the Padichah of the Ottomans with the same degree of respect which she shows to the Emperor of all the Russias. The Padichah, on the other hand, accredits his Ambassador to Great Britain in a Lettre de Chancellerie, to which his Autograph Signature is subscribed, and upon which the mark of a Cachet seal is impressed in ink. It would thus appear that Reciprocity between Nations is not required in the ceremonial of accrediting their Diplomatic Agents. Each Nation has its own practice, and whenever a simplification of form has been adopted by any Nation, such simplification has been held not to imply any diminution of respect towards the Sovereign to whom the Letters of Credence are addressed.

The Letters of Credence are the document which the Public Minister presents upon his formal reception by the Sovereign to whom he is accredited, but he cannot require to be solemnly received for the purpose of presenting his Credentials before he has delivered an authentic copy of them to the Minister or Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, in order that he may satisfy himself that they are fit and proper Letters for his Sovereign to receive. Letters of Credence addressed to a Sovereign Prince must be presented of Right to the Sovereign himself even during his minority, and although the Government of the State is entrusted to a Regent. Such was the practice in France during the minority of Louis XV. and the Regency of the Duke of Orleans, and such was in very recent time the practice observed in Spain⁴⁴ during the minority of Queen Maria Isabella and the Regency of the Duke of Vittoria. Letters of Credence expire upon the demise either of the Chief of the State by whom they were furnished, or of the Chief of the State to whom they are addressed. Fresh Letters of Credence must be presented, if a Public Minister be promoted by his Sovereign from a lower to a higher Order, as for instance, if he should be raised from the rank of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to that of Ambassador.

⁴⁴ Ch. de Martens, Guide Diplomatique, Tom. I. § 18.

Full
Powers.

§ 213. Although the Letters of Credence, which are presented by a Diplomatic Agent accredited to reside at a Foreign Court, imply General Full Powers on his part to transact all political business on behalf of his Constituent, it is usual nevertheless, if any Special Treaty or Convention is to be negotiated, to furnish the Diplomatic Agent with a Mandate or Instrument of Full Powers to negotiate and conclude the particular Treaty or Convention. The Mandate (Mandatum Procuratorium), or, as it is commonly termed, the Full Powers (les pleins pouvoirs), are always set forth in Letters Patent of the Sovereign, which are signed and sealed according to the form which prevails in each State in regard to Letters Patent. The Full Powers granted by European Sovereigns are for the most part signed by the Sovereign, and countersigned by the Minister or Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

A Mandate of Full Powers may be a Mandate ad hoc, limited to the particular business of the negotiation or treaty (pouvoirs spéciaux), or it may be a Mandate to treat generally with the Ministers of all Powers and States within the dominion of the Sovereign to whom the Minister is accredited (pouvoirs généraux), or it may extend still further, and may be a Mandate to treat with all Powers or States (pouvoirs illimités). Limited Full Powers are generally given to a Diplomatic Agent where the object of the negotiation is a particular treaty with a particular Power. General Full Powers on the other hand are given, whenever there is a Congress of Ministers Plenipotentiary nominated by various States, and when it may be uncertain what Powers or States may take part in the Congress. Unlimited Full Powers are more rare, and are only given when it is uncertain not only what Powers and States may take part in a Congress, but where such Congress may be held or adjourned to, and what matters may come under discussion and negotiation. Thus unlimited Full Powers were given by the Queen of England to the British Diplomatic Agents, who concluded the negotiations on behalf of the British Crown at the Congress of Paris in 1856. M. de Garden⁴⁶ says correctly that such Full Powers are extremely rare. Publicists seem to speak of such Full Powers as not in use in the present day. Thus Ch. de Martens⁴⁸ says, "Il n'est plus d'usage de munir un Ministre du Plein Pouvoir, qui l'autorisait à traiter avec toutes les Puissances, et que l'on appelait 'actus ad omnes populos.'" Sir Robert Phillimore⁴⁷, on the other hand, construes this Latin phrase as equivalent to "Letters accrediting the bearer to all Courts." If this interpretation be correct, there is no doubt that such Letters of Credence are not in present use, but it seems doubtful from the instances cited by Ch. de Martens whether the Latin phrase is to be inter-

⁴⁶ Traité Complet de Diplomatie, T. II. p. 48.

⁴⁸ Guide Diplomatique, I. c. 4. § 19.

⁴⁷ Commentaries, XI. § 230.

preted in such a sense, inasmuch as Ch. de Martens alludes, in illustration of his remark upon the disuse of such Full Powers, to a Full Power granted by Queen Anne of England to her Secretary d'Ayrest, then British Resident at the Hague, whereby he was authorised to treat with the Ministers of all Princes and States interested in the negotiations of the Peace of Utrecht⁴⁸. Such a Full Power is evidently not more extensive than the Full Powers which are in use, when occasion requires them, in the present day, and which are quite distinct from Roving Letters of Credence. Thus Full Powers were given by the First Consul Napoleon to General Augereau to make peace with the Sovereign Princes of Germany, and to treat with the States of the Germanic Empire. By virtue of such Full Powers General Augereau entered into separate negotiations and concluded separate Treaties with individual Princes and States of that Empire, according as he found any of them favourably disposed to his proposals of Alliance or of Neutrality⁴⁹.

Instructions.

§ 214. Every Diplomatic Agent is furnished by his own Government with Instructions as to the object of his Mission and for the guidance of his conduct. These Instructions are sometimes given orally, but more generally in writing, so that the Agent may be able to refer to them from time to time as occasion may require. The Instructions, being for his own guidance, ought to be kept secret by him, unless he is expressly authorised by his Government to communicate them in part, or in extenso. The duty of every Diplomatic Agent is to conform his conduct to his

⁴⁸ Lamberty, Mémoires, T. VIII. p. 742. lique Française et divers Princes d'Allemagne (14 Sept^{re}, 1800.)

⁴⁹ Conventions entre la Répub- Martens, Recueil, VII. p. 112.

Instructions, unless it should happen from unforeseen circumstances, that a strict compliance with them would defeat the object of his Mission, or otherwise lead to consequences prejudicial to the interest of his Constituent. Under such circumstances it may become his duty to suspend the execution of his Instructions, or even to deviate from them, provided he does not engage his Government to any measure opposed to its general Policy or conflicting with the special object of the Negotiations, with which he has been instructed. If questions should arise upon which a Public Minister is without Instructions, it is his duty to refer them to his Government, in other words to entertain all propositions or overtures ad referendum. If the case is urgent, and the time does not admit of referring to his Government for Instructions, it is his duty either to reject all overtures absolutely, or, if he entertains them, to accept them explicitly sub spe rati. This latter form, however, has now nearly passed out of use, since there is for the most part an express provision in every Treaty which is concluded by Diplomatic Agents, that the Ratifications of the Contracting Powers shall be exchanged within a certain number of days, it being thereby implied that the Treaty-Engagements do not acquire full force and effect, unless sanctioned by the Ratifications of the Parties upon whom the fulfilment of their provisions will devolve.

The practice of inserting in the body of a Treaty a provision as to Ratification has been adopted ex majori cautela to prevent any dispute as to the necessity of Ratification, as Publicists are by no means of accord on this subject. Grotius⁵⁰ and Puffendorf⁵¹ hold, that ⁵⁰ De Jure B. et P., L. II. c. 11. § 12.

⁵¹ Law of Nature and of Nations, L. III. c. 9. § 2.

the act of a Diplomatic Agent, if it is within the scope of his Full Powers, binds his Constituent absolutely upon the analogy of the Roman Law as to the Contract of Mandatum. Their doctrine is upheld by Vattel⁵² and Klüber⁵³. Bynkershoek⁵⁴, on the other hand, maintains that the Usage of Nations requires a Ratification from the Sovereign in order to give validity to a treaty concluded by his Minister in every instance, except in the very rare case where the entire Instructions are contained in Special Full Powers, and that the analogy of the Roman Law is not to be considered an unerring guide in this matter, as the Practice of Nations has intervened and has excepted International Compacts in this respect from the Rules of Civil Jurisprudence. The reason of this apparent anomaly of a Constituent not being bound by the act of a duly authorised Agent, will be more fully discussed in the next following chapter upon the Right of Treaties: it may be sufficient for the present moment to observe, that for the sake of the business itself of negotiating successfully, it has become the Practice of Nations to give as extensive and general Full Powers as possible to Diplomatic Agents, even to the extent of a promise to ratify, in order that they may be able to do and to agree to all that their Constituents could do or agree to. The exercise, however, of these Powers is in practice understood to be regulated by Secret Instructions under the further control of Non-Ratification. The Non-Ratification of Preliminaries under the circumstances of such large ⁵² Droit des Gens, L. II. c. 12. § 156.

⁵³ Droit des Gens, Partie II. T. II. § 142.

⁵⁴ Mandata illa Generalia, ut nunc sunt Gentium mores, nihil fere, ut dixi, præbent, quam potestatem agendi, minime vero agendi ex arbitrio contra ipsæ Principis mandata secretiora. Quæst. Jur. Publici, L. II. c. 7.

Powers is not considered to involve any breach of the Law of Nations.

§ 215. The Ceremonial to be observed in the reception of a Foreign Minister at the Court to which he is accredited has undergone great modifications within recent times. It was one of the regulations which were adopted by the Congress of Vienna, (anno 1815,) that an uniform mode of reception for Diplomatic Agents of each class should be established in each State; and although this provision has not been literally carried into execution, the practice of Nations has conformed itself to the spirit of it. Whatever be the rank or class of a Public Minister, it is his first duty to notify his arrival immediately to the Minister or Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of the Sovereign to whom he is accredited. In the case of an Ambassador, as distinguished from a Diplomatic Agent of the Second Class, it was formerly the practice for him to make a Solemn Entry into the city, which was the residence of the Sovereign or the seat of his Government. This ceremony may now be regarded as fallen into general desuetude, as far as regards the mutual intercourse of the Christian Powers of Europe. The Solemn Entry was part of the pageant, which terminated in a Public Audience, in which the Ambassador presented his Letters of Credence to the Sovereign in person. Ambassadors, as distinguished from Ministers of the Second Class, have always been entitled to demand a Public Audience of the Sovereign, but the Solemn Entry appears to have been a Ceremony which was within the discretion of the Sovereign, who receives the Embassy, to accord or not at his pleasure; and we find accordingly, that both the Holy See and the Ottoman Porte had special rules of practice, under which the Solemn Entry was granted only to the Ambassadors of particular Nations.

Ceremonial of Reception.

With regard to the Public Audience, which is granted to Ambassadors and Nuncios on their arrival, and sometimes on their departure, the same Ceremony is observed to all alike. The Introducer of Ambassadors, or the Master of the Ceremonies, proceeds in a State carriage of the Sovereign drawn by six horses to the Hotel of the Ambassador, and conveys him to the Palace of the Sovereign, where he is received in the presence of the great Officers of the Court, with the same honours which would be paid to the Sovereign, if present, whom he represents. The Ambassador then reads a Speech of Audience in which he refers to his Letters of Credence, which he thereupon takes from the hands of his Secretary of Embassy, who attends him on such occasions, and presents to the Sovereign, who hands them to the Minister or Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. The Sovereign then reads an answer to the speech of the Ambassador, who thereupon retires from the presence of the Sovereign with the same forms with which he entered the Presence-Chamber. The Ceremony of a Public Audience has of late been frequently dispensed with at the Court of St. James' on occasions of the reception of an Ambassador from an European Sovereign, and on such occasions a Private Audience has been substituted of a similar kind to that which is accorded to a Foreign Minister of the second or third class. Such an audience, however, is not altogether free from Ceremony. The Sovereign receives the Ambassador in the presence of the Minister or Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and the Introducer of Ambassadors or the Master of the Ceremonies attends to present in due form the Ambassador, who makes a short speech explanatory of his Mission, and having presented his Letters of Credence to the Sovereign, retires.

§ 216. It being necessary that Nations should treat and hold intercourse with one another in order to adjust disputes and maintain relations of amity, and it being impossible for a Nation collectively to treat with another Nation, there results a necessity for Nations to delegate Agents on their behalf, and to furnish them with full Powers to negotiate and settle the matters which may be at issue. The Right of Embassy being thus established, the inviolability of the person of the Ambassador is a necessary consequence; for if the person of the Ambassador is not secure from violence of every kind, the Right of Embassy becomes precarious and the channels of International Reconciliation will be closed. Vattel⁵⁶ accordingly derives the independence and inviolability of the Ambassadorial character from the Natural and Necessary principles of the Law of Nations. This attribute of inviolability is so absolute, that the person of an Ambassador is held to be sacred. "Sanctum inter gentes jus legationum, sancta corpora legatorum"⁵⁶. Bynkershoek⁵⁷ accounts for the peculiar sacredness of the person of the Ambassador on the ground that an Ambassador represents his Sovereign, and that he is the Minister of peace and alliance, and that without his agency the Society and Repose of Nations could not be maintained.

§ 217. The inviolability of the person of an Ambassador entails, as a necessary incident, his entire exemption from the Territorial Jurisdiction of the Sove-

The Sacred
Character
of an Ambassador.

His Exterritoriality.

⁵⁶ Droit des Gens, L. VII. § 81, 103. Klüber, § 103. Hefter, § 205.

⁵⁶ Grotius, De Jure Belli et Pacis, L. I. c. 18. § 1.

⁵⁷ De Foro Legatorum, c. 5.

reign to whom he is accredited. This exemption, which applies to the civil as well as the criminal law of the Territory, is founded upon considerations not of mere convenience but of necessity; for an Ambassador ought to be protected from every kind of compulsion, as well from that which relates to things necessary to him, as from that which touches his person, in order that his security may be complete⁵⁸. The fiction of Ex-territoriality has been accordingly introduced with a view to express in the most forcible manner the completeness of this exemption. According to this fiction the Public Minister, although de facto resident in a foreign country, is regarded as de jure resident within the territory of the Nation which he represents, and he continues to be subject to the Laws of his own country in all matters which concern his Personal Status and Property⁵⁹.

The Right of Personal Inviolability attaches to a Public Minister from the time when he enters the territory of the State to which he is accredited, if notice of his Mission has been previously communicated to it, to the time when he quits the territory, although war should have actually broken out between his own Nation and the State to which he is accredited before he has taken his departure. The Ottoman Porte in this respect has conformed its prac-

⁵⁸ Nam omnis coactio abesse a legato debet, tam quæ res ei necessarias, quam quæ personam tangit, quo plena ei sit securitas. Grotius, De Jure Belli et Pacis, L. II. c. 18. § 9.

⁵⁹ Quare omnino ita censeo, placuisse gentibus ut communis mos, qui quemvis in alieno territorio existentem ejus loci territorio subjecit, exceptionem pateretur in legatis, ut qui sicut fictione quadam habentur pro personis mittentium, ita etiam fictione simili constituerentur quasi extra territorium; unde et civili jure populi, apud quem vivunt, non tenentur. Grotius, De Jure Belli et Pacis, L. II. c. 18. § 4, 5.

tice to that of the Christian Powers of Europe. It was formerly the rule of the Porte, if war broke out between it and a Christian Power, to imprison the Diplomatic Agent of that Power in the Castle called the Seven Towers, until peace was reestablished. The Porte first waived this practice when the war broke out with Russia, which was terminated by the peace of Bucharest (28 May, 1812). In the course of the conferences which preceded the departure of the Ambassadors of France, Great Britain and Russia, in the year 1827, the Porte formally declared to the Ministers of Austria and Prussia that the Seven Towers no longer existed⁶⁰.

§ 218. The same reasons which warrant the Independence and Personal Inviolability of an Ambasador, concur likewise in securing the sanctity of his abode. The general consent of Nations has accordingly extended in practice the fiction of Ex-terri- toriality to the Hotel of the Ambassador; which is not merely protected by the positive Law of Nations from all lawless outrage, but is inaccessible to the ordinary officers of Justice or of Revenue⁶¹. The Ex-territoriality of the Ambassador's Hotel is however not so absolute as to constitute it an asylum for others than those, who form the suite of the Ambassador himself. Bynkershoek⁶² has discussed the Right of Asylum for all who take refuge in the Hotel of an Ambassador, which Grotius⁶³ has pronounced to be a privilege depending upon the concession of the State wherein the Ambassador resides, and not to be a part of the Law of Nations; and Bynkershoek has correctly pointed out, that all the privileges of Am-

Ex-territoriality of the Ambassador's Hotel, and of his Suite.

⁶⁰ Ch. de Martens, Guide
Diplomatique, § 23.

⁶¹ Vattel, Droit des Gens,
L. IV. c. 9. § 117.

⁶² Bynkershoek, De Foro Legatorum, c. 21.

⁶³ Grotius, De Jure Belli et Pacis, L. II. c. 18. § 8.

bassadors have one and the same object in view; namely, to enable them to discharge the duties of their office without impediment or restraint; and that it is not necessary for the discharge of their duties that they should afford shelter from justice to third parties, who are not connected with the end and objects of the Mission. The limits, within which an Ambassador may claim the privilege of Ex-territoriality, in regard to his own Personal Suite, are within the discretion of the Ambassador, the privilege in regard to his own Personal Suite being granted for the convenience of the Ambassador himself; but an Ambassador cannot waive, at his discretion, the privilege of Ex-territoriality in regard to any members of his Official Suite; that is, of any officer of his Household appointed by the Sovereign himself. The Chief of the State alone may waive the privilege of Ex-territoriality on behalf of the Ambassador and the personnel of the Embassy. It is not even competent for any of these individuals to waive at their own pleasure this privilege⁶⁴, for it is not their personal privilege, but the privilege of the Independent State or Nation which they represent. Difficulties have occasionally arisen, from persons claiming without sufficient warranty, to belong to the Suite of a Foreign Minister, and the usage of most Nations now requires, that an official list of all the members of the Suite of a Foreign Minister shall be transmitted to the Minister or Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs at fixed periods⁶⁵.

The Ambassador's
Jurisdiction

§ 219. It follows from the principle of Ex-territoriality, that a Foreign Minister is at liberty to exercise Criminal and Civil jurisdiction over the personnel of the Embassy, if he be so empowered by his own Nation. It rests accordingly with the discretion of the Sovereign Power, which accredits an Ambassador, to invest him with such Jurisdiction. It is customary in Civil matters for a Foreign Minister to be invested with, and to exercise, jurisdiction in all questions which may arise amongst the members of his Official Suite, or between them and the citizens or subjects of the country to which he is accredited; but it is not the usage for him to exercise jurisdiction in criminal matters, over any person officially attached to the Embassy further than by arresting the offender and sending him for trial back to his own country. In the case of his own Personal Suite, a Foreign Minister may, if he pleases, upon complaint made to him, dismiss any individual from his service, and so withdraw from him the protection to which he would be entitled under the Law of Nations, if he continued in his service.

⁶⁴ Vattel, L. IV. c. 8. § 3.
Bynkershoek, De Foro Legatorum, c. 23.

⁶⁵ Wheaton's Elements, Part III. c. 1. § 16. Phillimore's Commentaries, T. II. § 188.

§ 220. There are some exceptions to the privilege of Ex-territoriality as applied to the Hotel of an Ambassador. /A Foreign Minister is privileged from being called upon to contribute personally to the General Taxes of a Country; that is, to such Taxes as are levied by the Government, and which are available for the General purposes of the State, in which the Ambassador is not interested. But a Foreign Minister is not exempt from the payment of Local dues, which are raised for purposes of Local administration, and which are expended on Local objects, from which he himself, in common with his neighbours, derives immediate benefit. Thus he is liable to pay the Local Rates⁶⁶ assessed upon his

tion over the personnel of the Embassy.

Liability
of an Ambassador to the payment of Local dues.

⁶⁶ This liability has been sometimes disputed, and Klüber holds

Hotel, or its site, for sewerage, lighting, watching, and similar objects⁸⁷. He is also liable to pay tolls for the use of roads and bridges, and also for the carriage of his letters, if they are conveyed to him by the Local Post; and as he is at liberty at all times, if he pleases, to send his letters by a privileged Courier, it is therefore optional for him to employ the services of the Local Post, and if he employs it, he derives immediate advantage therefrom⁸⁸.

Liberty of Religious Worship.

§ 221. Another and more important exception to the privilege of Ex-territoriality, is found in the exercise of Religious Worship (Culte Religieux) in the Hotel of an Ambassador. A Foreign Minister has not the right of maintaining a Chapel and a Chaplain within his Hotel, under the Common Law of Nations⁸⁹; and accordingly, we find the liberty of Religious Worship for the Ambassador and his Suite, made a matter of Treaty-engagement between the

it to be doubtful, whether such Rates can be rightfully exacted, if the Ambassador is unwilling to pay them. Wheaton considers the Ambassador's Hotel to be subject to taxation, in common with the other Real Property of the Country. A practical difficulty will always be found in levying them, as the Person and Property of the Ambassador is exempt from the Jurisdiction of the Civil Tribunals, which must be appealed to in order to enforce payment in the last resort.

⁸⁷ No uniform rule can be said to exist on this subject, as the circumstances under which water and light are supplied to the Ambassador's Hotel may vary in different countries, but the tendency in the present day is to uphold the liability of a Foreign Envoy to pay Local dues, from which he and the inhabitants of his Hotel derive immediate benefit. Such is the practice in Germany, whilst in Sweden a Foreign Envoy is exempt from every kind of tax, but then the supply of water and light to his hotel is a matter of private contract. In the case of some of the parishes in Westminster there are private Acts of Parliament under which the proprietor of a house, which is leased to a Foreign Envoy, is made personally liable to pay the local Rates.

⁸⁸ Ch. de Martens, Guide Diplomatique, § 109.

⁸⁹ Martens, Précis, § 222.

Roman Catholic and Protestant Powers of Europe, subsequently to the Reformation; and between the Christian and Mahomedan Powers at all times since Diplomatic intercourse was established between them. There are some countries in which, under the Territorial Law, all forms of Religious Worship are permitted, in which case no Treaties are required: there are others, in which one form of Religious Worship is established, and none other is tolerated. In such cases it has been usual to stipulate by Treaty for the free exercise of Religious Worship, on behalf of the members of the Embassy and the Suite of the Ambassador within the Hotel of the Embassy. It has been an invariable rule to concede this privilege, whenever there has been no public place of Religious Worship at the seat of the Embassy, which its members could attend, as being in accordance with their Religious Creed; or wherever there has not been within the Hotel of another Ambassador accredited to the same Court a Chapel, in which such Religious Worship has been already permitted. Thus, as soon as the Emperor Joseph II had granted liberty of Religious Worship to the Protestants of the Confession of Augsburg resident in Vienna, he insisted upon the discontinuance of Religious Worship in the Chapels of the Legations of the Protestant Princes of the Germanic Empire⁷⁰. Grotius is altogether silent on this subject, but his silence has not any significance, seeing that in his day a Resident Embassy (Assidua Legatio) was altogether a novelty, and it had not any warrant of ancient Custom⁷¹. At the time, however, when Vattel wrote his work on the Law of ⁷⁰ Klüber, Droit des Gens, § 215. Ch. de Martens, Guide Diplomatique, § 35. ⁷¹ Grotius, De Jure Belli et Pacis, L. II. c. 18. § 3, 2.

Nations, the free exercise of Religion was a privilege allowed to a Foreign Minister in almost every country. Vattel speaks of it as resting on established Custom⁷². "It is indeed highly proper," he says, "that a Minister, and especially a Resident Minister, should enjoy the free exercise of his Religion within his own house, for himself and his Suite. But it cannot be said that this Right, like those of Independence and Inviolability, is absolutely necessary for the success of his Mission, particularly in the case of a temporary Minister, the only one whom Nations are bound to admit. The Minister may in this respect do what he pleases in his own house, into which nobody has a right to pry or to enter. But if the Sovereign of the Country, where he resides, should for substantial reasons refuse him permission to practise his Religion in any manner which might render it an object of Public notice, we must not presume to condemn the conduct of that Sovereign, much less to accuse him of violating the Law of Nations. Ambassadors are not debarred at present from the free exercise of their Religion in any civilised country; for a privilege, which is founded on Reason, cannot be refused when it is not attended with any evil consequences." The practice of nations since the time of Vattel has become still more courteous⁷³, and has gradually extended the privilege of Religious Worship to the establishment of public Chapels, attached to the several foreign Embassies; so that although the privilege of a Chapel within the Hotel of the Ambassador is a matter of Comity, and not of strict Right, still the custom of permitting it has become so universal, that to refuse such permission in the present day would be little less discourteous, than to refuse to permit the continuous Residence of the Ambassador himself. The privilege of a Chapel, however, does not extend to the use of bells, or to any public processions or ceremonies outside the walls of the Chapel.

⁷² Vattel, Droit des Gens, plomatique, § 35. Wheaton's Elements, Part III. c. 1. § 21.
L. IV. § 104.

⁷³ Ch. de Martens, Guide Di-

§ 222. Jurists are divided in opinion upon the question whether an Ambassador is by the Law of Nations entitled of Right to Safe Conduct whilst passing through the territory of a third Power, on his way to or from the territory of the Nation to which he is accredited. Grotius⁷⁴ does not expressly determine this question, when he says, that "the law respecting the Inviolability of Ambassadors is to be understood as binding upon the Nation to whom the Embassy is sent, more particularly if it has received the Embassy, as from that time a tacit Compact may be considered to have been introduced." Bynkershoek, on the other hand, holds in terms, that the privilege of the Ambassadorial Character is only operative within the State to which he is accredited, and he cites in support of his view the opinions of Gentilis, Zouch, Huber, and Wicquefort. Bynkershoek⁷⁵ admits however that the opinions of the more ancient writers upon the Rights of Ambassadors were in a contrary sense. Vattel, on the other hand, draws a distinction between the enjoyment of all the Rights annexed to the Diplomatic Character, and the enjoyment of Personal Inviolability. It must be borne in mind, that many of the Rights now recognised as incident to the Right of Embassy, have only been so recognised, since the practice of accrediting Resident Ambassadors has given occasion

Inviolability of an Ambassador passing through the territory of a third Power.

⁷⁴ Grotius, De Jure Belli et Pacis, L. II. c. 18. § 5.

⁷⁵ Bynkershoek, De Foro Legatorum, c. 9. § 7.

for their recognition. "It is true," says Vattel⁷⁶, "that the Prince alone to whom the Minister is sent is obliged and specially engaged to secure to him the enjoyment of all the Rights attached to his Character; but the others, over whose territory he passes, cannot refuse to him that to which the Minister of a Sovereign is entitled, and which Nations owe reciprocally to one another. They owe to him above all things perfect Personal Security. To insult him would be to injure his Master and the whole Nation to which he belongs: to arrest him and offer violence to him would be to impair the Right of Embassy, which appertains to all Sovereigns." Merlin⁷⁷, Klüber⁷⁸, Ch. de Martens⁷⁹ and Wheaton⁸⁰, support Vattel's opinion, and Merlin disputes with good reason the interpretation, which Bynkershoek has assigned to the word passerende, which occurs in an Edict of the States General (anno 1679) issued on the occasion of the Negotiations for the peace of Nimeguen. The Edict announced that the persons, domestics, and effects of foreign Ambassadors or Ministers, "hier te lande komende, residerende, of passerende," should be exempted from arrest. Bynkershoek considers this Edict as having reference only to foreign Ministers accredited to the States General, and construes the word passerende as referring not to those who might have landed in the territory of the States General, and were passing through it on their way to the territory of a third Power, but to those who were about to leave the territory of the States General, having been accredited to them as Resident Ministers. "Non

⁷⁶ Droit des Gens, L. IV. c. 8.

§ 84.

⁷⁷ Répertoire, tit. Ministre Publique, Sect. V. § 3.

⁷⁸ Droit des Gens, 204.

⁷⁹ Guide Diplomatique, § 36.

⁸⁰ Elements, Part III. § 20.

interpreter," are his words, "de legatis transeuntibus, sed abeuntibus." Merlin in reviewing Bynkershoek's interpretation maintains, that passerende, being the Dutch equivalent of the French word passer, is applicable only to a person who, having arrived at a place, proceeds onward to another place, and is never used to designate a person who is leaving a place where he has been residing, and going back to the place from which he first came. Merlin however very justly remarks, that when it is said that an Ambassador is entitled to have his Independence respected in every territory through which he passes, it must be understood that he travels under the avowed character of an Ambassador; in other words, that his passport certifies his Public Character. If an Ambassador, who is in itinere, presents such a passport at the frontier of a State other than that to which he is accredited, and is thereupon allowed to enter its territory, the good faith of the Sovereign of that State becomes pledged to respect his Official Character, as long as he does nothing inconsistent with perfect good faith on his own part. A Nation is at liberty to refuse a passage through its territory to a foreign Minister accredited to a third Power, precisely as a Nation is entitled to refuse altogether to receive a foreign Minister accredited to itself, but, if it allows him upon knowledge of his Character to enter its territory, it may not maltreat him nor suffer any violence to be offered to his Person.

The reasons assigned by Bynkershoek for restricting the privilege of the Ambassadorial Character are thus stated, "quia illa privilegia voluntatis tacitæ sunt post admissum legatum, et legatum etiam repellere licet, neque legatio inter alios, quam qui misit et ad quem mittitur, versatur." On examining these reasons, it will be found that the principle involved in the first reason does not militate against Vattel's view, if the Ambassador travels with a passport which certifies his Official Character, as every State, through whose territory he proposes to pass, is at liberty to decline to admit him in such Character, and his admission is thus a Voluntary act upon its part; on the other hand, the second reason, whilst it may be a valid reason so far as Resident Embassies and the secondary rights of Embassy incidental to Residence are concerned, is inconsistent with the fact that the person of the Courier who is the bearer of the despatches of a Foreign Minister is sacred under the Law of Nations, whilst he is passing through the territory of a Power to whom the Minister is not accredited, if the Official Character of the Courier is certified by his passport. The Right of Innocent Passage, in regard to an Ambassador on his way to the Court to which he is accredited, is a Right in which all Nations are interested. It may be said of the disputes of Nations as of individuals, "Rei Publicæ interest ut finis sit litium." It is in the common interest of Nations that the peace of the World should be maintained, and the Personal Inviolability of the Ambassador, whose Mission is essentially that of Peace, is as necessary for that end, when he is passing on his way to his destination, as when he has reached his post. Vattel⁸¹ holds that Francis I of France was justified not merely in declaring war against the Emperor Charles V, by reason of the murder of his Ambassadors, accredited respectively to Constantinople and to Venice, whilst passing through the Duchy of Milan, but in calling in the aid of other Nations, since it was not a Private Right of a particular Nation which was in dispute, but a matter which involved the Right of all Nations, since they are all interested in maintaining the Sacred Right of Embassy and of those means which enable them to hold communication with each other and to treat of their Commercial interests⁸². Wheaton, who, as already observed, supports the views of Vattel and Merlin, remarks, that the Inviolability of a public Minister in his passage through the territory of a third Power depends upon the same principle which protects the person of his Sovereign coming into the territory of a friendly State by the permission, express or implied, of the local Government. Both are equally entitled to the protection of that Government against every act of violence and every species of restraint inconsistent with their Sacred Character⁸³.

⁸¹ Droit des Gens, L. IV. c. 7. § 84.

⁸² The cases of the Duc de Belle Isle, Ambassador of France to Prussia, arrested in Hanover on his way to Berlin, and of the Marquis de Monti, Ambassador from France to Poland, arrested in Dantzic on his way back to France, which are sometimes quoted as examples of the practice of Nations in accordance with Bynkershoek's view, will be found on examination to be instances of enforcing a strict Right of War. The details of each case will be found in the collection of Causes Célèbres du droit des Gens, par Ch. de Martens, Tom. I. pp. 210, 285.

⁸³ To the two cases above mentioned may be added that of the Earl of Elgin, Ambassador from Great Britain to the Ottoman Porte, who was arrested in his lodgings at the Hôtel de Richelieu in Paris by order of the First Consul in 1803, immediately upon the rupture of the Peace of Amiens. Lord Elgin was on his way home from Constantinople at the time of his arrest, and was not released until the end of the war. This was an extreme instance of the exercise of the summum jus of a belligerent, inasmuch as Lord Elgin had furnished passports to all the French prisoners in Turkey during the campaign of Egypt in 1801, and they had reached France unmolested by the British cruisers solely in virtue of Lord Elgin's passports. For the general history of the arrest and detention of British subjects on this occasion, see the author's volume on the Rights and Duties of Nations in Time of War, 2nd edition, Oxford and London, 1875, p. 95. The First Consul offered to exchange Lord Elgin for a French General Officer, but the British Govern-

"We have used," says Wheaton, "the term permission, express or implied, because the public minister of a Sovereign Prince accredited to one country, who enters the territory of another country making known his Official Character in the usual manner, is as much entitled to avail himself of the permission, which is implied by the absence of any prohibition, as the Sovereign himself in a similar case⁸⁴."

Consuls not Diplomatic
Agents.

§ 223. The Institution of Public Consulates in Foreign Countries (Consulats à l'Etranger) dates from the Sixteenth Century, although the name of Consul, as applied to an Officer exercising jurisdiction in Commercial matters, was in familiar use in the cities of the Mediterranean and in the Hanse Towns since the Thirteenth Century⁸⁵. The Judge-Consul was originally a local Officer annually elected in each great City of Maritime Commerce by the members of the Mercantile Community established therein. It was his province to determine all disputes between the members of that Community and foreign merchants in matters of Commerce and Navigation. These Officers were for the most part two in number, and the Consolato del Mare, one of the earliest compilations of Rules for the decision of Maritime and Commercial questions, is considered to have been so called, as embodying the Rules according to which the Judge-Consuls, established in the Maritime Cities of Spain, proceeded in determining the questions submitted to their decision. As Commerce increased, these Local ment did not consider such an exchange to be admissible. It would have been in fact an unequal exchange, and under the circumstances of hostilities being recommenced a diplomatist's pen was not an equivalent for a general officer's sword.

⁸⁴ Elements, Pt. III. § 20. Bynkershoek, De Foro Legatorum, c. 3, 9.

⁸⁵ The office of Judge-Consul was first introduced at Barcelona in Spain in the year 1279.

Institutions became inadequate to the wants of Merchants of different Nationalities, and we thus find the Institution of Judge-Consuls fall into disuse, and their functions pass into the hands of Officers bearing indeed the name of Consuls, but appointed not by the resident body of merchants in each City, but by Foreign States, and commissioned by them to watch over the Commercial interests of their subjects. The duties of a Consul in the modern sense of the word are strictly limited to the management of the private affairs of the subjects or citizens of the State, from which he has received his Commission. He is not concerned in any way, as Consul, with the public affairs of States, and he is accordingly not clothed with a Diplomatic Character. J. J. Moser is almost the only Jurist of note who has claimed for the Consul a place of inferior rank amongst Public Ministers; but Bynkershoek, Wicquefort, Vattel, and Klüber concur in rejecting such a claim. It is true, that European Consuls accredited to Mahomedan Powers have in fact exercised many of the functions which mark the Diplomatic Agent, and have been clothed with many of the attributes of the Diplomatic Character; but the Status of the Consul in the Levant, as well as in China and in Japan, is exceptional, and rests upon special Treaty-engagements between the Christian and the Mahomedan or Buddhist Powers⁸⁶. A Consul is not the bearer of Letters of Credence, but he receives a Commission (lettre de provision) signed by the Sovereign authorising him to discharge the duties of Consul in the place where he is to reside: his nomination is not addressed to the Chief of the State, but his appointment is communicated to the Government, and its permission is required to enable him to enter upon his functions. The permission is given by a Rescript or Order from the Foreign Department of the State, to which the Consul is accredited, termed an Exequatur, the form of which varies in different countries, but the purport of which is to authorise the functionaries of the Home as distinguished from the Foreign Department of the Government to recognise the Official Character of the Consul⁸⁷. The Consul cannot enter upon his functions before the delivery of the Exequatur, which may be revoked at any time at the discretion of the Government of the Country, wherein he is established. It was not unusual in the case of the Free Cities of the Germanic Confederation, and the practice is still maintained in Mahommedan Countries and in several of the South American Republics, that Consuls or Consuls-General should also be accredited as Agents for Political purposes, or as Chargés d'Affaires. Under such circumstances they are invested with the Diplomatic Character, and are entitled to the privileges of Public Ministers. It is conformable to the principles of Public Law that the Consul, who is also Chargé d'Affaires, should not engage personally in trade. In the case of ordinary Consuls some Nations forbid and others allow their Consuls to trade. A Consul, who is engaged in trade, is amenable in all that regards his trade to the Local Jurisdiction equally as any private merchant, and although he may be a natural-born subject of the State whose Commission he bears, he will notwithstanding his Commission of Consul, acquire by continuous residence and trade a Commercial Domicil in the Country, in which he maintains his trading Establishment, and his property may thus in case of war be liable to be treated as the property of an Enemy by any Power, which is at war with the Country in which he carries on his trade.

⁸⁶ The special jurisdiction Ottoman Empire is treated of in which Consuls exercise in the a subsequent chapter.

⁸⁷ There are various grades in Consul, Consular Agent, and the Consular department, such as Consul-General, Consul, Vice-Pro-Consul.

CHAPTER XIII.

RIGHT OF TREATY.

Sacred character of Leagues between Nations—Leagues may be in confirmation or in extension of Natural Right—Religious obligation of every League—Equal and Unequal Leagues—Unequal Leagues not contrary to Equity—Personal and Real Leagues—Tests of Continuing Leagues—The Holy Alliance of 1815 a strictly personal League—History of the Holy Alliance—The Family Compact of the House of Bourbon—Treaties of Navigation and Commerce—Treaties of Jurisdiction—Treaties of Extradition—Civil law of the Romans as to fugitives from Justice—Common Law of Nations—Extradition of fugitive slaves and of deserters a frequent subject of Treaty-engagement—Extradition of political offenders exceptional—Treaties of Boundary—Judicial Decisions as to the permanence of certain Treaty-Engagements—Treaties which create a Servitude of Public Law—Treaties of Equal and Unequal Alliance—Treaties of Protection—Treaties of Subsidy—Treaties of Guaranty—Treaties of Neutrality—Conclusion and Ratification of Treaties—Termination and Renewal of Treaties.

The sacred
character of Leagues between
Nations.

§ 224. It has been observed in discussing the International Relations which existed between the Christian Powers of Europe and the Ottoman Porte at the conclusion of the Eighteenth Century, (§ 61,) that it was a maxim of the Mahommedan world, that there was no other Law of Nations than that which is derived from Positive Compact or Convention. Such also seems to have been the condition of things contemplated by the Roman Jurists, when they admitted the possible existence of an intermediate state between amity and hostility, in which the members of one Nation might stand in relation to the members of another Nation, when there was no League between the Nations themselves. It appears to have been a maxim of the Roman Law¹ in reference to such Nations, that although they were not to be regarded by the Romans as Enemies, yet if any thing should find its way out of Roman territory into their country, it would become their property, and if a Roman citizen should be captured by them, he would become their slave, whilst Roman citizens would be entitled to exercise analogous control over persons and things appertaining to such Nations, and happening to come within Roman territory. A doctrine of similar import was upheld amongst the ancient Greeks, and the practice of Statesmen in such matters found countenance in the writings of Philosophers. If we travel back to a period still more remote, we find that amongst the Jews of olden time it was denied that any satisfaction was to be made to an injured party who was a foreigner, unless his Nation was a Confederate of the Jewish Nation. There might however be Communities beyond the pale of the Race in the case of the Jew and the Greek, and beyond the precincts of the Asylum in the case of the Romans, towards whom Religion would enjoin the performance of the most friendly acts, if Public Covenants to that effect had been made with them, and when such Covenants had been made by the Sovereign Power in behalf of the Nation, the whole Nation was considered to be exposed to the wrath of the Deity, if any individual violated them in any respect. It thus became a matter of the last importance to Nations to reduce into a system the making of Public Covenants or

¹ Pomponius apud Dig. XLIX. Tit. XV. §. 5. Nam si cum gente aliqua neque amicitiam, neque hospitium, neque fœdus amicitiae causa factum, hi hostes quidem non sunt; quod autem ex nostro ad eos venit illorum fit, et liber homo noster ab eis captus servus fit eorum. Idemque est, si ab illis ad nos aliquis pervenerit.

Leagues, and the observance of the obligations of Law resulting therefrom. The Roman Nation from its peculiar origin, being founded on the Right of Sanctuary, seems to have felt an instinctive want of more definite institutions for this object than any which we discover amongst the Greek Races, and we find accordingly a religious Corporation established in Rome at a very early period, the Collegium Fetialium, whose special business it was to determine the conditions and to regulate the forms under which the Roman People could denounce Treaties and declare War without incurring the anger of the Gods.

Leagues
may be in confirmation or in extension of Natural Right.

§ 225. Grotius² has adopted a twofold division of Leagues, arising from the matter thereof, namely, those which require such things only as are agreeable to the Law of Nature, and those which add something more thereunto. Puffendorf³, whilst he approves the principle of this division, subdivides the latter class, and thereby virtually adds a third class, namely, those which restrain the duties of Natural Law, when they are too general and indefinite, to certain and particular articles. "Leagues," says Grotius, "of the first kind are generally made between enemies upon the conclusion of a war, and formerly were often made, and indeed were in a certain manner necessary, between those who had never contracted any engagement towards one another; which arose from this circumstance, that the Rule of Natural Right, which maintains that there is a kind of Natural Relationship between all mankind, and therefore that it is wrong for one man to harm another, had become effaced by evil habits, as of old before the Deluge, so likewise some time after the Deluge, so that it was accounted lawful to rob and plunder Strangers, without declaring war⁴. So inveterate indeed was the corruption of manners amongst the Greeks, that Aristotle, the Philosopher of Practical Life, maintained that hunting, as a branch of warfare, was a Natural habit of mankind, as respects wild beasts and such individuals of the human race, as, being intended by nature to be in a subject state, refuse to submit themselves⁵.

² De Jure B. et P., L. II. c. 15.
§ 5.

³ Law of Nature and of Nations, L. VIII. c. 9. § 1.

§ 226. A League in its simplest form was but the extension of the Religious Obligation, under which Fellow-Citizens stood towards one another, as votaries of the same Gods. It was the formal recognition on the part of two Nations of a reciprocity of Duty and Right under a common Sanction. Thus the Amphictyonic Confederation was a League of States, in which the Religious character was paramount, all the members of the League being votaries of Apollo, and making offerings to that Deity in common at the Delphic Shrine.

The Civitas or Nation was in its earliest form a body of persons making sacrifices to the same Deities. The Stranger was beyond the pale of the common Religion of the Civitas. There was accordingly no obligation upon the members of a State in respect of a Stranger, as such, corresponding to the obligations which existed amongst Fellow-Citizens, who could appeal in the last resort to a Divine Sanction, which was acknowledged by all alike. The League, however, admitted the Stranger within the pale of Religion,

⁴ Thucydides describes in like terms the manners of the early Greeks, L. I. c. 5. Servius, in his Commentary upon the eighth and tenth Æneid, speaks in similar language of the Tyrrhenians; Diodorus Siculus, L. V. c. 34, reports the same of the Iberians, and Cæsar de B. Gall., L. VI. c. 23, says of the Germans, Latrocinia nullam habent infamiam, quæ extra fines cujusvis civitatis fiunt.

⁵ Politica, L. I. § 3.

and the ceremony of his admission was the offering of a common sacrifice to the Deity. Hence we find amongst the Greeks that the simplest form of League was denoted by the term σπονδή, which signifies a common libation poured out to the Gods, and which had a symbolic character, seeing that the Contracting Parties mixed wine together as an emblem of concord, and then poured it forth in common with a prayer, that whoever should first break the compact might have his blood poured forth in like manner⁶. The conclusion of a League between two Nations constituted a State of amity between them, which put an end to that vague condition, which Sallust⁷ describes, when he speaks of King Bocchus as “nobis neque bello, neque pace cognitus.”

Under the simplest head of Leagues may be classed all Compacts between Nations for freedom of Commerce and for Hospitality towards Strangers of either Nationality, as being agreeable to the Law of Nature. A Nation may enter freely into Leagues of this kind with every Nation, as the duties involved in them cannot conflict with one another, any more than the duties of Natural Law. “No person,” says the Advocate of King Perseus before the Achæan Assembly, “seeks to induce you to enter into any new Alliance, which will embarrass us, but only into an agreement, which will secure to each party freedom of Commerce and reciprocity of Right. Such an agreement will not be inconsistent with our Alliance with the Romans.”

Unequal
and Equal Leagues.

§ 227. Leagues, which add something to the Natural Law of Nations, are divided by Grotius into Equal and Unequal Leagues. Puffendorf adopts the same classification. The first are such as are concluded on equal terms, when not only the engagements themselves are equal on both sides, either absolutely or in proportion to the strength of either party, but also when neither party is by such engagements rendered in any way dependent upon the other. Unequal Leagues are of two kinds, according as the inequality regards the stronger or the weaker party. The stronger party may undertake to give assistance without requiring it in return, or to perform more in proportion than the weaker State is required to do, or the weaker State may submit to conditions which limit the exercise of its Natural Right of independence. For instance, a Nation may undertake to account the friends and enemies of another Nation as its own friends and enemies, or not to fortify particular parts of its own territory, or not to keep on foot more than a certain number of trained soldiers or war-ships, without being shorn of its Independence in any way. On the other hand, if a Nation undertakes not to make peace or war at all without the consent of another Nation, or not to send or receive Ambassadors, such an undertaking would substantially impair its Independence, and the Nation which has so contracted with another Nation will have become virtually dependent upon it.

⁶ Homer, II. III. 300.

⁷ Sallust, de Bello Jugurthino, c. 22.

§ 228. Vattel^s has made a distinction between Unequal Leagues which are contrary to Equity, and Unequal Leagues which are not contrary to Equity, and consequently not contrary to Natural Law. Of the latter kind are those which contain conditions, which a Nation may feel authorised by the care of its own safety to impose upon another Nation, either by way of precaution against probable danger, or by way

Unequal
Leagues
not contrary to Equity.

^s Droit des Gens, L. II. § 180.

of penalty in order to punish an unjust aggressor, and to render the Nation incapable for some time of renewing its aggression. A Nation, which has been victorious in war, dictates for the most part to its adversary unequal terms of peace. There is a limit, however, beyond which such inequality may not extend without awakening the alarm and enlisting the sympathy of other Nations in behalf of the vanquished. "Sound policy," writes Vattel, "will not permit a Great Power to suffer the Small States in its neighbourhood to be oppressed. If it abandons them to the ambition of a Conqueror, the latter will very soon become formidable to it in its turn. Accordingly Sovereigns, who are in general sufficiently true to their own interests, seldom fail to observe this maxim. Hence the Leagues, at one time against the House of Austria, at another time against its Rival, according as the one or other Power preponderated. Hence that Equilibrium, the perpetual object of Negotiation and War."

Personal
and Real Leagues.

§ 229. Another celebrated distinction of Leagues, which is recognised by Grotius⁹ and Puffendorf, is that which divides them into Personal and Real. "The former," says Puffendorf¹⁰, "are such as are made with the Prince purely with relation to his Person, and expire with him; the latter are such as are made with the Kingdoms or Commonwealths, rather than the Prince or Government, and these outlive the Ministry and the Government itself, under which they were first made." Vattel¹¹ adopts a somewhat clearer and sounder definition, when he says that Personal Treaties relate to the persons of the Contracting Parties, and are confined and in a manner attached to them ; whilst Real Treaties relate only to things or matters in negociation between the Contracting Parties, and are wholly independent of their persons. A Personal Treaty expires with him who contracts it ; a Real Treaty attaches to the body of the State, and subsists as long as the State, unless the period of its duration has been expressly limited. Thus every Treaty concluded between the Kings of France and the Sultans of Constantinople from 1535 down to 1740, expired on the death of the Sultan for the time being. The Treaty of 1740, between King Louis XV and Sultan Mehemet II, was the first which in terms bound their successors. It is of great importance not to confound these two kinds of Treaties. Accordingly Sovereigns are at present accustomed to express themselves in their Treaties in such a manner as to leave no uncertainty in this respect, and this is doubtless the best and surest plan. In default of this precaution the subject-matter of the Treaty, or the expressions, in which it is conceived, may furnish means to ascertain whether it be Real or Personal.

⁹ De Jure Belli et Pacis, L. II. c. 16. § 16.

¹⁰ Law of Nature and of Nations, L. VIII. c. 9. § 6.

¹¹ Droit des Gens, L. II. § 183.

§ 230. Vattel has laid down certain general rules for ascertaining the character of a Treaty, whether it be a continuing Treaty after the death of one of the Contracting Parties. The circumstance, that a Treaty is concluded in the name of a Sovereign Prince, does not thereby constitute it a personal Treaty, although when a Treaty is concluded in the name of a Republic or Popular Government, it is the Nation itself which contracts, and the Treaty is undoubtedly a Real Treaty. Public Treaties concluded by a King are Treaties of the State, and are obligatory on the Nation over which the King is Sovereign, and which he represents for external purposes. The presumption accordingly, in respect of every Public Treaty, is, that it concerns the State itself, and is so far a Real Treaty. The question however as to its continuance is not thereby settled. It may be binding on the Nation, but the length of time, during which it shall bind the Nation, may vary with the terms of the Treaty, or the subject-matter of it. Thus if a Treaty is concluded for a certain number of years, or is declared to be perpetual, its duration will not be dependent upon the lives of the contracting parties ; or if a King declares in a Treaty that it is made for himself and his Successors, or that it is made for the good of his Kingdom, it is manifest that the Treaty is intended to last as long as the Kingdom itself. In case of doubt, if there be no expressions in the Treaty itself, nor any circumstance dehors the Treaty, which will determine its duration, it ought to be presumed to be a Real Treaty, if its provisions are favourable ; if its provisions on the other hand are odious, it may be with reason concluded to be a Personal Treaty, and as such intended to expire upon the death of either of the Contracting Parties. By favourable provisions are meant such provisions as tend to the mutual advantage of both the Contracting Parties ; by odious provisions are understood such provisions as are either an absolute burden upon one of the Parties, or are more burdensome on the one than on the other Party. This rule for determining the continuing operation of Treaties is conformable to Reason and Equity. In the absence of certainty we must have recourse to probability. When the question relates to things favourable and equally advantageous to both Parties, it is consistent with probability that they should intend their contract to be permanent, and no injury can result to either Party by the contract being perpetuated. If, on the other hand, there be any thing odious in the Contract, if there be penal or prohibitive clauses in the Treaty, which lay a burden upon one of the Parties to it, there is no reasonable ground for supposing in the absence of positive words to that effect, that the Sovereign, who entered into such engagements, intended to burden his kingdom for ever. On the contrary, every Sovereign is presumed to desire the safety and advantage of the Nation which he represents, and not to intend to load it for ever with a burdensome obligation. On the other hand, it is consistent with probability, that the Party to the Treaty, who has imposed a burden on the other Contracting Party, if it was mutually intended by them that he should enjoy his advantage for ever, would not have neglected so to stipulate as to place the matter beyond a doubt, well knowing that mankind seldom submit to burdens, unless bound by formal obligations. If this presumption should be in a particular case inconsistent with the fact, and it should deprive a party of his Right, it will be a consequence of his own negligence. Thus much is certain, that if one or other of the Contracting Parties must sacrifice a Right, it will be a less violation of Equity, that the one should forego an anticipated advantage, than that the other should suffer an unexpected loss. It is the famous distinction between “de lucro capiendo” and “de damno vitando”¹².

*Tests of Continuing
Treaties.*

§ 231. The term “League” has been adopted by Kennett, the translator of Puffendorf, to distinguish that species of Public Compact between Nations, which does not presuppose a State of War. Truces and definitive Treaties of Peace, which presuppose a State of War, belong to another Category, and will be considered apart. The most remarkable instance in modern times of a Personal League, is that which was concluded at Paris, (Sept. 14, 1815¹³), between the Emperor of Austria, the King of Prussia, and the Emperor of Russia; and which has been designated the Holy Alliance. It was signed in triplicate by the three Sovereigns personally, and does not bear any Ministerial counter-signature. It was published at St. Petersburg, on Christmas Day, 1815, by the Emperor Alexander, accompanied with a Manifesto, announcing that the object of the Alliance was to establish a Christian Fraternity amongst the Nations of Europe. The majority of the Sovereign Princes of Europe subsequently acceded to this Alliance, upon the invitation of one or other of the three Contracting Parties, but the Prince Regent of Great Britain was formally precluded by considerations of Constitutional Law from annexing his signature to it, as appears by his Letter of October 6, 1816. Much has been said of this Alliance both in praise and dispraise of it. It has been extolled as a declaration of the purest International Morality, it has been condemned as a Monarchical Compact against Popular Liberties. If its history be considered, and its contents examined, it may result that it neither deserves the encomiums bestowed upon it, nor merits the opprobrium lavished against it. It was a romantic effusion of political sentiment on the part of the Emperor Alexander, which had no practical meaning, and which Prince Metternich, Prince Hardenberg, and Lord Castle-

The Holy Alliance of 1815 a strictly Personal League.

¹² Droit des Gens, L. II. § 190.

¹³ Martens, N. R. II. p. 656. British and Foreign State Papers, vol. III. 1815-1816, p. 211. The words "Au nom de la très Sainte et indivisible Trinité," are prefixed to the Treaty, which circumstance is not without precedent.

reagh combated in vain ; and to which the Emperor of Austria and the King of Prussia unwillingly acceded, from personal considerations towards their ally. Its tone savours more of a Papal Rescript than a Political Treaty, for the sum and substance of it is to affirm, that the Princes of Europe and their Peoples are members of one Great Christian Nation, and that Peace amongst those members can only be preserved by the practice of the duties, which the Saviour of mankind has inculcated. Klüber regards the Holy Alliance as the formal application of Christian Morality to the Government of mankind, and to the mutual intercourse of Nations. Its place in the system of the Public Law of Europe was fixed by the Protocol of Nov. 15, 1818, signed by the Plenipotentiaries of Austria, France, Great Britain, Prussia and Russia, assembled in conference at Aix-la-Chapelle, in which it is spoken of as forming "a bond of Christian Fraternity amongst the Sovereigns themselves ¹⁴." The declaratory part of the Treaty is as follows : "Déclarent solennellement, que le présent Acte n'a pour objet que de manifester, à la face de l'Univers, leur détermination inébranlable de ne prendre pour règle de leur conduite, soit dans l'administration de leurs Etats respectifs, soit dans leur relations politiques avec tout autre gouvernement, que les préceptes de cette Religion Sainte, préceptes de justice, de charité, et de paix, qui, loin d'être uniquement applicables à la vie privée, doivent, au contraire, influer directement sur les résolutions des et intérêts communs ; union devenue plus forte et indissoluble par les liens de fraternité Chrétienne, que les souverains ont formés entre eux. Martens, N. R. IV. p. 555.

¹⁴ Qu'elles sont fermement décidées à ne s'écarter ni dans leurs relations mutuelles, ni dans celles qui les tiennent aux autres états, du principe de l'Union intime, qui a présidé jusqu'ici à leurs rapports

Princes et guider toutes leurs démarches, comme étant le seul moyen de consolider les Institutions humaines et de remédier à leurs imperfections ¹⁵.”

History of the Holy Alliance.

§ 232. The Holy Alliance was so singular in its conception, and its political import was so totally different in fact from what has been generally supposed, that it may not be superfluous to give a short account of it. The Emperor Alexander of Russia was liable to periodical accesses of political excitement, which breathed sometimes the Spirit of Absolute Monarchy resting on Divine Right, at others savoured of the lessons which he had early imbibed in an opposite spirit under the tuition of La Harpe. It was under the influence of strong excitement of the former character, that he communicated to his two Allies at Paris his project for the establishment of a Christian Fraternity amongst the Sovereigns of Europe. Both these Monarchs endeavoured in vain by reasoning with their august Ally to persuade him to abandon his project, and the arguments of their Ministers, Prince Metternich and Prince Hardenberg, as well as of Lord Castlereagh, who represented the Prince Regent in the Conferences at Paris, had as little weight with him as the intercessions of the Sovereigns. So excited indeed was the imagination of the Emperor Alexander by the general opposition to his views, that the Emperor of Austria expressed to Prince Metternich and Lord Castlereagh his conviction, that, if the Allies persisted in refusing altogether to sanction the Emperor's project, the effect might be seriously prejudicial to his mind. It was determined

¹⁵ Martens, N. R. II. p. 657. took place on Nov. 19, 1815, Most of the European Sovereigns and his Act is printed in acceded to the Act. The accession of Louis XVIII of France D'Angeberg's Congrès de Vienne, 2^{me} partie, p. 1549.

accordingly, with a view to deprive the Alliance of all substantial importance as a Political Act, that it should receive the signatures of the Sovereigns alone, without any Ministerial counter-signature. After the document had been drawn up and signed by the three Sovereigns, a copy was transmitted to Lord Liverpool, who was the Chief of the British Cabinet, by Lord Castlereagh, accompanied by an autograph letter addressed to the Prince Regent, written by the Emperor of Russia himself and signed by the three Allied Sovereigns, in the following terms :—

Paris, le 26 September, 1815.

MONSIEUR NOTRE FRÈRE ET COUSIN,

LES évènements, qui ont affligé le monde depuis plus de 20 ans, nous ont convaincu, que le seul moyen d'y mettre un terme se trouvoit dans l'Union la plus franche et la plus intime entre les Souverains, que la Divine Providence a placé à la tête des Peuples de l'Europe. L'Histoire des 3 années mémorables, qui viennent de s'écouler, atteste les effets bien-faisants, que cette Union a produit pour le salut de l'humanité, mais afin d'assurer à ce lien la solidité que réclame impérieusement la grandeur et la pureté du but, vers lequel il tend, nous avons pensé qu'il dût être fondé sur les principes sacrés de la Religion Chrétienne.

Profondement pénétré de cette importante vérité, nous avons conclu et signé l'Acte, que nous soumettons aujourd'hui à la méditation de votre Altesse Royale. Elle se persuadera qu'il a pour objet de raffermir les rapports qui nous unissent, en formant de tous les Peuples de la Chrétienté une seule et même Famille, et en leur assurant par là, sous la protection du Tout-Puissant, le bonheur, le salut, les bienfaits de la paix et des liens de fraternité à jamais indissolubles. Nous avons vivement regretté que Votre Altesse Royale n'ait point été réuni avec nous dans le grand moment, où nous avons conclu cette Transaction. Nous l'invitons comme notre premier et plus intime Allié à y accorder, et à compléter une œuvre uniquement consacré au bien de l'humanité, et que nous devons dès lors considérer comme la plus belle récompense de nos efforts.

FRANÇOIS.

FRÉDÉRIC GUILLAUME.

ALEXANDRE.

Notre Frère et Cousin,
Le Prince Régent de la Grand Bretagne.

Lord Castlereagh at the same time took the precaution of transmitting the draught of an innocuous answer for the Prince Regent to send back. This draught underwent a careful revision at the hands of Lord Liverpool, and the contents of it, as ultimately settled, were as follows :—

Carlton House, Oct. 6, 1815.

SIR, MY BROTHER AND COUSIN,

I HAVE had the honour of receiving your Imperial Majesty's Letter, together with the Copy of the Treaty signed by your Majesty, and your August Allies, at Paris, on the 26th of September.

As the forms of the British Constitution, which I am called upon to administer in the name and on the behalf of the King, my Father, preclude me from acceding formally to this Treaty, in the shape in which it has been presented to me, I adopt this course of conveying to the August Sovereigns, who have signed it, my entire concurrence in the principles they have laid down, and in the declaration which they have set forth, of making the Divine precepts of the Christian Religion the invariable rule of their conduct, in all their relations, social and political, and of cementing the Union which ought ever to subsist between all Christian Nations; and it will always be my earnest endeavour to regulate my conduct, in the station in which Divine Providence has vouchsafed to place me, by these sacred maxims, and to cooperate with my August Allies in all measures which may be likely to contribute to the peace and happiness of mankind.

With the most invariable sentiments of friendship and affection,

I am,

Sir, My Brother and Cousin,

Your Imperial Majesty's Good Brother and Cousin,

GEORGE P. R.

His Imperial Majesty
the Emperor of Austria.

§ 233. The Treaty of Friendship and Union concluded at Paris (August 15, 1761¹⁶) by the Plenipotentiaries of the Very Christian King and the Catholic King, is an instance of a Family League, which may be regarded as an enlarged form of a Personal League. The object of this Treaty, which is expressly designated in the Preamble as a Family Compact, was to establish a perpetual alliance between the French and Spanish branches of the House of Bourbon, and to afford to either Crown a reciprocal guaranty of all its possessions wheresoever situated. The simple demand of succour on the part of either Crown was to constitute a casus fœderis without the necessity of any explanation. Provision was made by the nineteenth article of the Treaty for the admission of the Neapolitan branch of the House of Bourbon. Although this Treaty was made by the two Sovereigns on behalf of themselves and their Successors, and so far in terms satisfies one of Vattel's definitions of a Real Treaty¹⁷; yet the subject of it discloses the intention of the Contracting Parties to confine its benefits to

The Family
Compact of the House of Bourbon.

¹⁶ Martens, Recueil, I. p. 16.

¹⁷ Droit des Gens, L. II. § 188.
De même, lorsqu'un roi déclare dans le traité, qu'il le fait pour lui et ses successeurs, il est manifeste que le Traité est réel. Il est attaché à l'Etat, et fait pour durer autant que même le royaume.

the House of Bourbon, so clearly, that it may be regarded as altogether exceptional¹⁸, seeing that it contains an express provision (Art. XXI), that no other Powers than those, which may be of the House of Bourbon, can be invited or admitted to accede to it. Accordingly we find, when His Catholic Majesty made a formal application to Louis XVI of France in 1790 for aid, in pursuance of this Treaty, in defence of his possessions on the West Coast of North America against Great Britain, the National Assembly, to which body Louis XVI was obliged, under the altered condition of the Monarchy in France, to submit the letter of the King of Spain, demurred to the application, considering the Family Compact between the two Crowns not to be identical with a Public Treaty between the two Nations¹⁹.

Treaties of Navigation and Commerce.

§ 234. The object of all Leagues is the promotion of Society amongst Nations, and this Society relates either to peaceful Commerce, or to community of War²⁰. Leagues which relate to Commerce may be of various kinds. The rudiments of Commercial Leagues may be traced in the stipulations between Nations for the hospitable reception of Strangers, and the distinction between the foreigner regarded quâ βίσιπρος, and the foreigner regarded quâ ξένος, consisted in the circumstance, that the latter had a claim ties are personal in their own nature, and expire of course on the death of the King or the extinction of his family. Such an alliance is made for the defence of the King and his Family.—Vattel, L. II. § 195.

¹⁸ Kings do not always treat solely and directly for their Kingdoms. Sometimes by virtue of the power they have in their hands, they make treaties relative to their own persons, or their families, and this they may lawfully do, as the welfare of the State is interested in the safety and advantage of the Sovereign, properly understood. These treat-

¹⁹ Twiss on the Oregon Question, London, 1846, p. 112. Annual Register, 1790, p. 303.

²⁰ Puffendorf, c. 8, c. 9.

of Right to Hospitality, which the former had not. An early example of this kind of League may be seen in the Treaty concluded between Alyattes King of Lydia and the Citizens of Miletus, whereby it was provided that the two Nations should be the guests and allies of one another ²¹.

As soon as the security of private intercourse between the individual members of different Nations had been established, the commercial interchange of commodities for the most part followed in the wake of Hospitality. Foreign commerce thus sprang up, and in many States, where foreign commerce became important, it was found necessary to place it under regulations, and wherever Taxation became an engine of State government, duties or tolls came to be imposed upon foreign merchants frequenting the ports of a State. Treaties of Navigation and of Commerce thereupon came to be agreed upon between Nations, whereby it was provided that the subjects of the one Power might safely trade in the ports of the other Power on condition of paying customary tolls, or of paying not more than a fixed toll, or of paying not more than was paid by subjects or favoured Allies.

A Treaty of Navigation and Commerce may be for a term of years or for an indefinite period ; it may provide for trade merely, as for instance for the importation and exportation and transit of particular merchandise, for the port-dues, and transit-dues, and custom-dues, to be levied thereupon ; or for the incidents of trade in connexion with the residence of merchants ; as for instance, the exercise of jurisdiction, the practice of religion, the payment of personal taxes. The provisions of a Treaty of Commerce may extend even further, and may apply to the contingencies of war breaking out between the contracting parties and a third Power, or between Powers which are strangers to the contracting parties. Thus it may be provided that, if war should break out between the contracting Powers, the subjects of either Power, resident in the territory of the other Power, should be allowed an interval of time to collect their goods and effects, and to withdraw in safety to their own country²²; or it may be provided, that, if war should break out between one of the Contracting Powers and a third Power, certain goods shall not be regarded by the former as Contraband of War, or that certain vessels shall not be liable to search or seizure by the former, if laden with cargoes belonging to the subjects of any third Power, or that Privateers shall not be allowed to be fitted out or provisioned in the ports of one of the contracting parties by any Third Power engaged in war with the other contracting party²³. Again, it may be provided in case of war breaking out between Powers which are Strangers to the contracting Parties, that the latter will maintain the security of their mutual commerce on the High Seas by an armed force, if it should be required; or that debts due from individuals of the one Nation to individuals of the other, and the shares or money which they may have in the public funds, or in public or private banks, shall never in any case of war be sequestrated or confiscated; or that foreign subjects shall be permitted²⁴ to remain and continue their ²² Such stipulations have become an accustomed formula in Commercial Treaties. — Kent's Commentaries, I. § 56. Martens' Précis, § 259. Bynkershoek, Qu. Jur. Publici, L. I. c. 7.

²¹ Herodot. Hist. L. I. § 22.

²³ Treaty between France and the United States of America, Feb. 6, 1778. Martens, Recueil, II. p. 595.

²⁴ Treaty between Great Britain and the United States of business (if it be other than that of commerce on the high seas), notwithstanding a rupture between the Governments, so long as they conduct such business innocently²⁵.

A Nation may enter into a Treaty, by which it grants exclusive privileges of trade to one Nation and deprives itself of the liberty to grant similar privileges to another. Of this kind was the famous Methuen Treaty²⁶ concluded between Great Britain and Portugal (Dec. 27, 1703), whereby Portugal obtained a preferential scale of duties for her wines in British markets, whilst Great Britain, on the other hand, obtained what she considered to be a satisfactory equivalent, by securing the opening of the Portuguese markets for her woollen manufactures. It was formerly the policy of the Christian Nations of Europe to obtain exclusive privileges of trade by Treaties with Asiatic and African Nations. Thus the Dutch engrossed to themselves the trade in cinnamon and other produce of the island of Ceylon, by a Treaty with the King of Candy²⁷. An opposite policy now prevails; and we find accordingly that Great Britain took care to recite in her Treaty²⁸ with China, that the Five Ports had been declared to be open to the trade of all Nations heretofore trading at Canton, and stipulated only for her own subjects the same America, Nov. 19, 1794. Martens, Recueil, V. p. 662. Grotius, De Jure B. et P., L. III. c. 20. § 16.

²⁵ Treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Chili, May 16, 1832. Martens, N. R. XI. p. 439. The provisions of this Treaty deserve attention, as they are most comprehensive.

²⁶ Chalmers' Collection of Treaties, T. II. p. 305.

²⁷ Traité de Paix entre la Hollande et le Roi de Candy (Feb. 14, 1766). Martens, Recueil, T. I. p. 319.

²⁸ Supplemental Treaty of Houmon-Schai (Oct. 8, 1843). Martens, N. R. Gén. T. V. p. 595. B. & F. State Papers, XXXI. p. 132.

privileges, as should at any time be accorded to the Subjects of other Powers.

Treaties of Jurisdiction.

§ 235. Treaties of Jurisdiction are for the most part of two kinds: they either provide for the establishment of special tribunals for the adjudication of all questions which may arise amongst foreign merchants, or between foreign merchants and the Subjects of the State wherein such merchants carry on their trade; or they provide for the exercise of jurisdiction by Consuls or Commercial Agents over their own countrymen within the territory of the State wherein they carry on their trade, or over their own countrymen and the subjects of such State, in matters of trade which may come into dispute between them. A foreigner, under the Common Law of Nations, may sue a Subject of the State wherein he resides in the Courts of that State, and he may be sued in those Courts by Subjects of that State. A foreigner may in like manner sue a foreigner in the Courts of a State wherein they are both resident. Jurisdiction as between Nations being territorial is founded by the presence of an individual within the territory of a Nation.

The Tribunals however of a State are not under any obligation to administer the Law of a Foreign State, unless there be a Treaty between the States to that effect. In the cases where Treaties provide for the erection of tribunals to decide all controversies between Strangers (transeuntes) who are not domiciled, such tribunals administer the Foreign Law, if it be invoked to settle the dispute. Thus there were Treaties between Great Britain and Portugal²⁹, and between Great Britain and Spain³⁰, and between France and Spain, and between France and Portugal, and between Spain and Portugal, under which special tribunals were provided, over which a Judge Conservator was appointed to preside; whose function it was to decide all disputes in commercial matters, which might arise between the Subjects of the respective States. If, however, a Natural born subject of Great Britain or of France had acquired a Domicil in Spain or Portugal, he became amenable to the ordinary tribunals of either country³¹ in any controversy with the Subjects of that country. On the other hand, Treaties provide sometimes for the exercise of an alternative Jurisdiction, as for instance, the Treaty of St. Petersburg³², concluded between France and Russia, (Jan. 11, 1857,) provided that the Consuls of either Power should exercise an exclusive jurisdiction over the masters and crews of the vessels of their own Nation within the Ports of the other Nation; and should exercise a voluntary jurisdiction over merchants of their own Nation, which, if such merchants had recourse to it, the Government of the country to which the Consuls were accredited should enforce; but such merchants might, if they were so minded, in the first instance, have recourse to the ordinary tribunals of the country, which by the local law were empowered to take cognisance of commercial matters. Russia, at the period when this Treaty was concluded, was in substance an Oriental Power, and there are accordingly found in this Treaty a variety of provisions, which mined by the Treaty of London, Treaty of Utrecht, Dec. 9, 1713.

²⁹ Treaty of Westminster, July 1810. Hertslet, VI. p. 28. Martens, N. R. III. p. 194. These Treaty of Rio Janeiro, Feb. 19, engagements have been deter-

July 3, 1842. Hertalet, VI. p. 205.

598. ³¹ Fœlix, Droit International

³⁰ Treaty of Madrid, May 23, Privé, § 148.
1667. Hertalet, II. p. 140. ³² Martens, Recueil, IV. p. 196.

are affirmations of the Common Law of Nations, as then received in Western Europe ; which, however, had not at such time acquired the sanction of Usage, as a rule of intercourse between Russia and the Western Powers.

Treaties which give an exclusive authority to the Consuls and Commercial Agents of a Nation to decide all disputes amongst merchants of their own country, and between merchants of their own country and the Subjects of the State to which they are accredited, are for the most part founded on a necessity arising out of the great discrepancies which exist between the Laws of the respective Nations in Civil and Criminal matters. The Christian Powers of Europe have from a very early period entered into Treaties of this kind with the Ottoman Porte³³, and with its Dependencies on the Barbary Coast³⁴, under which the Consuls of such Powers have exercised an exclusive jurisdiction over their own countrymen in all matters of difference amongst themselves. Treaties for an analogous purpose have been within recent time concluded between Great Britain and China³⁵, (July 29, 1843,) and between Great Britain and Japan³⁶, (August 26, 1858,) with the further provision, that all controversies arising in China or in Japan, between British and Chinese Subjects on the one hand, and between British and Japanese Subjects on the other, shall be determined by the British Consul, assisted in the one case by a Chinese, in the other by a Japanese Officer. The Jurisdiction over British Subjects in Criminal matters is to be exercised exclu-

³³ Hertslet, Treaties, II. p. 346.

³⁴ Algiers, Hertslet, I. pp. 61, 70. Tripoli, ib. pp. 127, 146. Tunis, ib. pp. 161, 166.

³⁵ Martens, N. R. Gén. V. p.

434. Hertslet, VI. p. 247.

³⁶ Martens, N. R. Gén. XVI. part II. p. 430.

sively by the British Authorities, even in cases where British Subjects commit any crime against Chinese or Japanese Subjects or the Subjects or Citizens of any other country. In the Treaty concluded between the Emperor of China and the United States of America ³⁷, (July 3, 1844,) there is a provision to the effect, that all controversies occurring in China, between Citizens of the United States and the Subjects of any other Government, shall be regulated without any regard to the Chinese Authorities, or without any intervention on their part. It is the practice of France, in accordance with the principles of her Civil Law, to conclude Treaties with Foreign Powers, whereby Jurisdiction is granted to the Consuls of France over French merchant vessels, in regard to any difference which may arise between the Captain, Officers, and Crews of such vessels, either on the High Seas or in the Ports of such Powers, and the aid of the Local Authorities is guaranteed to support the Jurisdiction of the Consul, if he shall invoke it ³⁸.

§ 236. Treaties of Extradition are another form of Treaty, whereby effect is given to the Jurisdiction of a State over its Subjects, who may have escaped into the territory of another State. The Common Law of Nations regards all Jurisdiction as founded on the possession of territory by an Independent Community. The Legislative Power of the Nation extends over all persons and property within the limits of its territory; but its laws do not operate vigore suo beyond its territory. Crimes against its Laws are altogether local, and cognisable only in ³⁷ Martens, N. R. Gén. VII. p. 134.

³⁸ The Convention of Feb. 23, 1853, between France and the United States of America, contains this amongst other special engagements. Treaties of the United States, p. 114. Wheaton's Elements, 1857, p. 171.

Treaties of Extradition.

the country in which they are committed. No other Nation, therefore, has any right to punish them, nor is under any obligation to take notice of them, neither is any other Nation bound to enforce any judgment rendered in such cases by the tribunals having authority to hold jurisdiction within the territory, wherein they have been committed³⁹. Such has been the tenor of a long course of decisions in British Courts of Law. "Penal Laws of Foreign Countries are altogether local," says Lord Loughborough⁴⁰, "and affect nothing more than they can reach, and can be seized by virtue of their authority." Mr. Justice Buller, in the same case upon a Writ of Error⁴¹, says, "it is a general principle that the Penal Laws of one Country cannot be taken notice of by another Country." A similar doctrine has been frequently recognised in the Courts of the United States of America. Thus Chief Justice Marshall⁴², in delivering the judgment of the Supreme Court in the case of a foreign vessel engaged in the Slave trade, which had been captured by an American Cruizer, said, "the Courts of no Country execute the Penal Laws of another Country." So likewise Chief Justice Spencer, when called upon in the District Court of New York to give effect to a Law of Connecticut, said, "the Defendant cannot take advantage of, nor expect the Court to enforce the Criminal Laws of another State. The Penal Acts of one State can have no operation in another State. They are strictly local, and affect nothing more than they can reach⁴³."

³⁹ Story, Conflict of Laws, Reports, p. 733.
 § 620.

⁴⁰ The Antelope, 10 Wheaton,

⁴¹ Folliott v. Ogden, 1. H. p. 123.

Blackstone, p. 135.

⁴² Scoville v. Canfield, 14 Johnson's Reports, p. 338.

⁴³ Ogden v. Folliott, 3 Term

§ 237. Certain Jurists have maintained that a State is under an obligation to punish Fugitives from Justice, on the demand of the State from whose jurisdiction they have withdrawn themselves⁴⁴; in other words, that a State is bound to allow its own Courts to exercise its own Jurisdiction over foreigners in respect of offences committed in Foreign Countries. But these writers rest this question too exclusively on the traditions of the Roman Civil Law, which regarded the various States of Christendom as succeeding to the relations, which formerly existed amongst the Provinces of the Roman Empire. But the Roman Law, if carefully examined, suggests another principle, when it orders Fugitives from Justice to be remitted to the forum delicti. The grounds, upon which such remission indeed was founded, rest equally upon the Imperial Supremacy; “Jure tamen civili notandum, remissionibus locum fuisse de necessitate, ut reus ad locum, ubi deliquerit, suo petente iudice, fuerit mittendus, quod omnes iudices uni subessent imperatori⁴⁵.” It would thus seem that in either case, whether the Criminal was tried in the place where he was found, or sent back for trial to the place where the crime had been committed, the Authority under which the trial or the remission of the Criminal took place was one and the same, namely, the Paramount Authority of the Emperor.

Civil Law of the Romans as to Fugitives from Justice.

§ 238. In the case of Nations there is no corresponding Paramount Authority to which all defer, and Jurists are divided in opinion whether there is any obligation upon a Nation to deliver up Fugitives from Justice upon the demand of another Nation. States

Common Law of
Nations.

⁴⁴ Hertius de Collisione Legum, § 4. n. 18. ⁴⁵ P. Voet de Statutis, s. XI. c. 1. n. 6.
c. 4. n. 6.

have without a doubt a right to refuse an asylum to the subjects of Foreign States. Martens designates this right as *Le Droit de Renvoi*⁴⁶. From a passage in a letter written by Sir Leoline Jenkins⁴⁷ at Nimeguen to Mr. Secretary Williamson, (April 3, 1675,) it would seem, as if the early Usage amongst Nations had been for States to decline jurisdiction over foreigners altogether, and to send them to their own country to be tried by their Natural Judges, but that such Usage had become obsolete in his time, as he speaks of "the matter of renvoy being disused altogether amongst Princes." Certain Jurists however maintain, that according to the usage of Nations States are obliged to refuse an asylum to the subjects of Foreign States, who are accused of crimes which affect the Public Peace and the security of Human Society, and whose surrender to its Officers of Justice is requested by the State, within whose territory the crime has been committed. Grotius, Heineccius, Burlamaqui, Vattel, Rutherford, Böhmer, Schmelzing, Kent, and Pasquale Fiore maintain the affirmative side of the question, whilst we find arrayed on the negative side Puffendorf, Voët, Leyser, Martens, Klüber, Kluit, Saalfeld, Schmalz, Mittermaier, Mangin, Wheaton, Heffter, Ortolan, Bluntschli, and Philimore. In the conflict of opinion amongst such high authorities we may safely have recourse to the practice of Nations. Great Britain, France, Russia, and the United States of America, have repeatedly declined to surrender up Fugitives from Justice on the demand of Foreign Powers, with which they had no Treaties to that effect, or in cases where the crimes alleged did not come within the scope of any existing ⁴⁶ Précis du Droit des Gens, § 91 b.

⁴⁷ Life of Sir Leoline Jenkins, vol. II. p. 714.

Treaty of Extradition. M. Fœlix seems to have stated the practice amongst Nations very correctly, when he says that all Extradition is subordinate to considerations of convenience and reciprocal interest⁴⁸. The authorities of a State are not obliged to surrender up a Criminal for the purpose of Extradition, except where there exists between two States Treaties formally applicable to the subject-matter.

§ 239. Treaties of Extradition in their earliest form appear to have contained stipulations for the surrender of fugitive slaves, and Compacts with that object in view were not unusual amongst the Nations of Greece⁴⁹. It would appear to have been the practice amongst those Nations to afford sanctuary to fugitive slaves, unless there was an International Compact to the contrary, or a provision to that effect embodied in some Treaty of Commerce.

Extradition of Fugitive Slaves and of Deserters, a frequent subject of Treaty-Engagement.

It is obvious that wherever Personal Servitude is recognised as a Legal Status, every attempt to change that Status without the legal formalities of Emancipation will be a crime against the Law of the State, and every fugitive slave will be ipso facto a Criminal according to that law. We find accordingly an article inserted in the Constitution of the United States of America (anno 1787), whereby the respective States bound themselves to deliver up Fugitive Slaves on the claim of the Slave-Master, notwithstanding the Status of Slavery was not a Legal Status in some of the States. "No person held to service or labour in one State under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall in consequence of any law or regulation therein be discharged from such service or labour, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labour may be due⁵⁰."

⁴⁸ Traité du Droit International Privé, L. II. § 608.

⁴⁹ Titi Livii Historia, L. XLI. c. 424.

The Treaties in modern times which bear most analogy to the ancient Treaties for the surrender of Fugitive Slaves are Treaties for the Extradition of Deserters from the military or naval service of a State. It is almost the universal practice of civilised Nations to conclude with one another Treaties, which have the latter object in view. The necessity for such Treaties is obvious between Conterminous States, where their military or maritime service is recruited by forced levies raised either by Conscription or by Impressment.

Extraterritorial
of Federal Government and State

240. The earliest Treaties of Extradition amongst the Nations of Europe since the fall of the Roman Empire appear to have been Treaties between Conterminous States such as England and Scotland (anno 1308), France and Savoy (anno 1378), for the surrender of Fugitives from Justice, who were charged with the commission of crimes against the peace of Society, such as murder, piracy, robbery, or forgery. M. Fœlix has reviewed the various Treaties which exist upon this subject amongst the Nations of Europe. France, Spain, Portugal, the Papal States, Holland, Sardinia, Belgium, Switzerland, and Great Britain, have severally entered into Treaties with various other Powers for the surrender of Fugitives

⁵⁰ The Constitution of the United States, as distinguished from the Articles of Confederation, bears some analogy to the Final Act of the Germanic Confederation, as distinguished from the Federal Act. The provisions of the Constitution have all the force of an International Compact between the respective States, which under the Articles of Confederation were declared to retain their Sovereignty, Freedom, and Independence, and every Power, Jurisdiction, and Right, which was not by such Confederation expressly delegated to the United States in Congress assembled.

from Justice who have been guilty of crimes against the person or against property; but they have not extended the engagements of such Treaties to persons accused of Political Offences. On the other hand, Russia, Austria, Prussia, and the various other States which composed the Germanic Confederation, the Two Sicilies, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, have entered respectively into Treaties for the surrender of Fugitives from Justice, accused of High Treason against the State from which they have escaped. Amongst the American States we find Treaties of the former kind concluded by the United States, and by Brazil, and of the latter kind by Columbia, by Peru, and by Mexico. It will be seen that the surrender of Political Offenders is rather the exception than the rule of such Treaties.

Every Treaty of Extradition takes effect in regard to crimes committed before it was concluded, unless its operation shall be expressly restricted, but with regard to the character of any crime alleged as warranting the demand for the surrender of a Fugitive from Justice, all Treaties of Extradition are stricti juris, being penal in their character and in exception to the Common Law of Nations. Their operation accordingly may not be extended beyond the letter of their stipulations.

§ 241. Heffter has very aptly remarked that the very fact of the existence of so many special Treaties respecting the Extradition of Fugitives from Justice is conclusive, that there is no such Usage amongst Nations, which constitutes the surrender of such Fugitives upon the demand of a State, whose laws have been violated, a perfect obligation upon other States. It is not unimportant to note, that Treaties of Extradition are for the most part made for a given term

Treaties of Extradition for the most part temporary.

of years; as, for instance, the Treaty between Great Britain and the United States, (Nov. 19, 1794⁵¹), was in this respect limited in duration to twelve years. This Treaty having expired in due course, in respect of the XXVIIth Article, which contained the provision for the Extradition of criminals, the United States accordingly maintained upon a demand being subsequently made by the British Government for the surrender of Daniel Sullivan, a British Subject, the master of a British Schooner, the Maria, who had run away with the Schooner and her cargo, and carried them into Mount Desart in the State of Maine, that as the engagement of the Treaty was for a limited time and had not been renewed, the United States were not under any obligation by the Common Law of Nations to restore the vessel and to deliver up the master and crew who had carried her off. Mr. Wirt, the Attorney General of the United States, in the legal opinion which he submitted to his Government, (Nov. 20, 1821,) stated, that he considered there was nothing in the Law of Nations, as explained by the Usage and Practice of the most respectable among them, which imposed on the United States any obligation to deliver up the Fugitives⁵². The Treaty of Washington, sometimes called the Ashburton Treaty, has been subsequently (August 9, 1842) concluded between the United States and Great Britain, under which the Extradition of the slave Anderson⁵³, who ⁵¹ Martens, Recueil, V. p. 686. Art. XXI. provided for the Extradition of all persons charged with the commission of murder or forgery within the jurisdiction of either State.

⁵² Opinions of the Attorney Generals of the United States, I. p. 391.

⁵³ The Extradition of Anderson was demanded on a charge of murder. He was not delivered up, as the Court of Common Pleas in Canada, on motion for a Habeas Corpus to discharge him from the custody of the gaoler, to which he had been committed under a Magistrate's had escaped from the State of Missouri into Canada, was demanded : but there is in this Treaty an express provision that the tenth Article, which provides for the Extradition of Fugitives from Justice, shall continue in force until one or the other of the parties shall signify its wish to terminate it, and no longer. The Tenth Article is in the following terms : "It is agreed that Her Britannic Majesty and the United States shall, upon mutual requisitions by them or their ministers, officers, or authorities respectively made, deliver up to justice all persons who, being charged with the crime of murder, or assault with intent to commit murder, or piracy, or arson, or robbery, or forgery, or the utterance of forged paper, committed within the jurisdiction of either, shall seek an asylum, or shall be found within the territories of the other ; provided, that this shall only be done upon such evidence of Criminality, as according to the Laws of the place where the fugitive or person so charged shall be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial, if the crime or offence had there been committed ; and the respective Judges and other Magistrates of the two Governments shall have power, jurisdiction, and authority, upon complaint made under oath, to issue a warrant for the apprehension of the fugitive or person so charged, that he may be brought before such Judges or other Magistrates warrant, found that there were some informalities in the proceedings before the Magistrate, and directed him to be discharged. The Court of Queen's Bench in Canada had refused to grant a Writ of Habeas Corpus, and the friends of Anderson had thereupon applied to the Court of Queen's Bench in Westminster Hall for the Writ, which was granted. Before, however, the Writ from Westminster Hall could be served in Canada, the Court of Common Pleas in that Province had ordered the discharge of the fugitive.

respectively, to the end that the evidence of Criminality may be heard and considered; and if on such hearing, the evidence be deemed sufficient to sustain the charge, it shall be the duty of the examining Judge or Magistrate to certify the same to the proper executive authorities, that a warrant may issue for the surrender of such fugitive. The expense of such apprehension and delivery shall be borne and defrayed by the party who makes the requisition and receives the fugitive⁶⁴."

The next following Treaty of Extradition, in regard to Fugitives from Justice, which Great Britain entered into with a Foreign State, was the Treaty of London, (Feb. 13, 1843,) concluded with France for the surrender in certain cases of Fugitives from Justice. By Art. I, it was agreed that the High Contracting Parties should, on requisitions made in their name through the medium of their respective Diplomatic Agents, deliver up to justice persons who, being accused of the crimes of murder, (comprehending the crimes designated in the French Penal Code by the terms assassination, parricide, infanticide, and poisoning,) or of an attempt to commit murder, or of forgery, or of fraudulent bankruptcy committed within the jurisdiction of the requiring Party, should seek an asylum, or should be found within the territories of the other: provided that this shall be done only when the commission of the crime shall be so established, as that the laws of the country where the fugitive or person so accused shall be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial, if the crime had been there committed.

Consequently, on the part of the French Government, the surrender was to be made only by the authority of the Keeper of the Seals, Minister of Justice, and after the production of a warrant of arrest, or other equivalent judicial Document, issued by a Judge, or other competent Authority in Great Britain, clearly setting forth the facts for which the fugitive should have rendered himself accountable; and on the part of the British Government, the surrender was to be made only on the report of a Judge or Magistrate duly authorised to take cognisance of the acts charged against the fugitives in the warrant of arrest or other equivalent judicial document, issued by a Judge or competent Magistrate in France, and likewise clearly setting forth the said acts.

⁶⁴ Hertslet, VI. p. 859. Martens, N. R. Gén. III. p. 456.

The expense of any detention and surrender made in the preceding Article was to be borne and defrayed by the Government, in whose name the requisition should have been made.

It was further provided that the Convention should not apply in any manner to crimes of murder, forgery, or fraudulent bankruptcy committed antecedently to the date thereof.

The Convention itself was to be in force until the 1st of January, 1844, after which date either of the High Contracting Parties was to be at liberty to give notice to the other of its intention to put an end to it, and it was to cease and determine at the expiration of six months from the date of such notice ⁵⁵.

It will be seen that the stipulations of both these Treaties applied to all persons indiscriminately, who might be charged with any of the enumerated crimes, without any regard to their Nationality. A Convention of Extradition, comprising a much greater number of crimes, but specially excepting native subjects or citizens of the party upon whom the requisition might be made, was signed at London (May 28, 1852) between France and Great Britain⁵⁶. It was provided by the Fifteenth Article, that the Convention should come into operation when an Act of Parliament should have passed to enable her Britannic Majesty to carry into execution the arrangements of the Convention; but the British Parliament declined to give the Executive Government the necessary Powers to execute its provisions, and the Convention which is now in force between Great Britain and France, is of a later day, namely, August 14, 1876.

⁵⁵ Hertalet, VI. p. 345. Martens, N. R. Gén. V. p. 20.

§ 242. Prior to the year 1870 the Executive Government of Great Britain had no power to give effect to Treaty-Stipulations with Foreign Governments for the surrender of Fugitives from Justice without a special Act of Parliament authorising it in each case to give effect to the treaty, but in 1870 a Statute (33 and 34 Vict. ch. 52) was passed giving power to the Crown to apply by Order in Council its provisions to any treaty arrangement with a Foreign Power for the surrender of criminals accused of any of the crimes contained in a Schedule appended to the Statute, but prohibiting the surrender of any fugitive for an offence of a political character. This Statute was amended by a subsequent Act, passed in 1873 (36 and 37 Vict. ch. 60), which brought offences committed before 1870 within the provisions of 33 and 34 Vict. ch. 52, and added considerably to the Schedule of Extradition offences, including amongst them offences against the Slave Trade Acts. A Royal Commission on Extradition was subsequently appointed in 1877, and their Report was published in 1878, and the tenor of their Report was to recommend that Statutory Powers should be granted to the proper British authorities to deliver up fugitive criminals, whose surrender should be asked for, notwithstanding there might be no treaty to that effect with the State against whose laws the offence has been committed. Such Statutory Powers however should be extended only to those States, to which it should be declared from time to time to apply by Order in Council. The principle upon which the Report proceeded was twofold; first, that it is the common interest of mankind that offences which militate against the good order of society should be repressed by punishment; and secondly, that it is for the interest of the State, within whose territory a criminal may have taken refuge, that he should not remain at large within it. The Commissioners further recommended that the list of Extradition offences should include all those offences which it is the common interest of mankind to suppress, but that offences of a local or political character should be excluded, nevertheless that a political motive should not be allowed to give immunity to a fugitive for a crime, which in itself, and apart from such motive, would be classed as an Extradition offence.

⁵⁶ British and Foreign State Papers, vol. XLI. p. 20.

§ 243. Treaties of Boundary belong to a class of Treaties of Boundary. Treaties, which are regarded by Jurists as perpetual in their nature; so that, being once carried into effect, they subsist independently of any changes which may supervene in the political circumstances of either contracting party, unless they are mutually revoked. Vattel⁵⁷ speaks of Compacts which have no relation to the performance of reiterated acts, but merely relate to transient and single acts, which are concluded at once, and suggests that they may be more properly called by another name than that of Treaties. Martens⁵⁶ has accordingly proposed to call them Transitory Conventions, which Wheaton approves. "Les Traités de cession," says Martens, "des limites, d'échange, et ceux même qui constituent une servitude de Droit Public, ont la nature des Conventions transitoires; les Traités d'amitié, de commerce, de navigation, les alliances égales et inégales ont celle des Traités proprement dits (fœdera). Les Conventions Transitoires sont perpétuelles par la nature de la chose."

⁵⁷ Droit des Gens, L. II. § 292.

To the same effect Mr. Wheaton⁵⁷ says, "General Compacts between Nations may be divided into what are called Transitory Conventions, and Treaties properly so called. The first are perpetual in their nature, so that, being carried into effect, they subsist independently of any change in the sovereignty and form of Government of the Contracting Parties; and although their operation may in some cases be suspended during war, they revive on the return of peace without any express stipulation. Such are Treaties of Cession, Boundary, or Exchange of Territory, or those which create a permanent Servitude in favour of one Nation within the Territory of another.

The principle involved in the doctrine of Jurists, that such Treaties are perpetual in their nature, may be thus stated. The International Acts, which have in view the settlement of a territorial boundary, are in substance Declarations or Recognitions of a Nation's title to a given territory, although they assume for the most part the form of Compacts. The form has come into use, partly because articles for the cession of territory or for the settlement of a territorial boundary between belligerents are frequently comprised amongst the articles of a Treaty of Peace, partly because that form has been considered to confer upon the transaction a more binding character, than that which might be supposed to attach to a simple Declaration. But a Treaty of Boundary, as an Agreement or Convention, does not exercise any more permanently binding force upon the parties vigore suo, than any other Treaty. The more correct view would seem to be, that the arrangements under the Treaty derive their character of permanence not from the Treaty, but from the Common Law of Nations, inasmuch as when a Nation has once recognised another Nation to be in lawful Possession of a territory, the Right of Possession of the latter is thereby established against the former Nation, whatever changes may subsequently arise in their mutual relations, as friends or foes. The Common Law of Nations maintains the latter Nation in its State of Possession, whenever such Possession has had a lawful origin, and the former Nation is by that Law for ever precluded from challenging the lawful origin of a State of Possession, which it has once solemnly recognised.

⁵⁶ Martens, Précis, § 58.

⁵⁷ Wheaton's Elements, Part III. c. 2. § 58.

§ 244. The Practice of Nations accords perfectly with the doctrine of Jurists in this matter. Thus a question was raised before an English Tribunal touching the interpretation of the Ninth Article of the Treaty of 1794⁶⁸, between Great Britain and the United States of America, which is as follows: "It is agreed that British Subjects, who now hold lands in the territories of the United States, and American

Judicial Decisions
as to the Permanent Object of Certain
Treaties.

⁶⁸ Martens, Recueil, V. p. 662.

Citizens, who now hold lands in the dominion of his Majesty, shall continue to hold them according to the nature and tenure of their respective states and title thereto, and may grant, sell, or devise the same to whom they please, in like manner as if they were Natives: and that neither they nor their heirs and assigns shall, so far as may respect the said lands and the legal remedies incident thereto, be regarded as Aliens." The question raised in the Rolls Court⁵⁹ in this case in 1830 was, whether by the Article above recited "American Citizens, who held lands in Great Britain on the 28th day of October, 1795, are at all times to be considered, as far as regards those lands, not as Aliens, but as Native Subjects of the Crown of Great Britain."

The 28th Article of the Treaty had declared that the ten first Articles should be permanent, but the Counsel in support of the objection to the title contended that "it was impossible to suggest that the Treaty was continuing in force in 1813, as it necessarily ceased with the commencement of the War; that the 37 G. III. c. 97 (which was passed to give effect to the Treaty) could not continue in operation a moment longer without violating the plainest words of the Act; that the word 'permanent' was used not as synonymous with 'perpetual or everlasting' but in opposition to a period of time expressly limited." On the other hand, the Counsel in support of the title maintained, that "the Treaty contained Articles of two different descriptions, some of them being temporary, others of perpetual obligation. Of those which were temporary, some were to last for a limited period, such as the various regulations concerning trade and navigation, and some were to continue so long as Peace subsisted, but, being inconsistent with a state of War, would necessarily expire with the commencement of hostilities. There were other stipulations, which were to remain in force in all time to come unaffected by the contingency of Peace or War. For instance, there were clauses for fixing the boundaries of the United States. Were the boundaries so fixed to cease to be the boundaries the moment that hostilities broke out?"

⁵⁹ Sutton v. Sutton, 1 Russell v. Mylne, p. 663.

Sir John Leach, who at such time filled the office of Master of the Rolls, in pronouncing judgment said, "The privileges of Natives being reciprocally given, not only to the actual possessors of lands, but to their heirs and assigns, it is a reasonable construction that it was the intention of the Treaty, that the operation of the Treaty should be permanent and not depend upon the continuance of a state of Peace."

"The Act of 57 G. III. c. 95 gives full effect to this Article of the Treaty in the strongest and clearest terms; and if it be, as I consider it, the true construction of this Article, that it was to be permanent and independent of a state of Peace or War, then the Act of Parliament must be held in the 24th Section to declare this permanency, and when a subsequent Section provides that the Act is to continue in force, so long only as a state of Peace shall subsist, it cannot be construed to be directly repugnant and opposed to the 24th Section, but is to be understood as referring to such provisions of the Act only as would in their nature depend upon a state of Peace. The principle involved in the permanency of this Treaty would seem to be, that the Treaty was in substance a recognition of a title to lands on the part of the actual possessors of those lands and their heirs, and that it would be inconsistent with such a recognition for the possessors at any time to be regarded as Aliens in respect of those lands."

The American Tribunals have adopted a similar rule of interpretation. Thus Mr. Justice Washington, in delivering judgment in a case before the Supreme Court of the United States*, said, "But we are not inclined to admit the doctrine urged at the Bar, that Treaties become extinguished ipso facto by war between the two Governments, unless they should be revived by an express or implied renewal on the return of Peace. Whatever may be the latitude of doctrine laid down by elementary writers on the Law of Nations dealing in general terms in relation to this subject, we are satisfied that the doctrine contended for is not universally true. There may be Treaties of such a nature as to their subject and import, as that War will put an end to them, but where Treaties contemplate a permanent arrangement of Territorial and other National Rights, or which in their terms are meant to provide for the event of an intervening War, it would be against every principle of just interpretation to hold them extinguished by the event of War. If such were the Law, even the Treaty of 1783, so far as it fixed our limits, and acknowledged our independence, would be gone, and we should have had again to struggle for both upon original revolutionary principles. Such a construction was never asserted, and would be so monstrous as to supersede all reasoning.

* We think, therefore, that Treaties stipulating for permanent rights and general arrangements, and professing to aim at perpetuity, and to deal with the case of War as well as of Peace, do not cease on the occurrence of War, but are at most only suspended while it lasts; and unless they are waived by the Parties, or new and repugnant stipulations are made, they revive in their operation at the return of Peace."

* The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, v. the Town of Newhaven. Wheaton's Reports, VIII. p. 494.

§ 245. Martens speaks of Treaties which create a Servitude of Public Law (une servitude du Droit Public) in favour of one Nation within the territory of another. The term Servitude is borrowed from the Civil Law of the Romans, where it is used to designate certain forms of innocent use; as for instance, a Right of Way across the land of a neighbour. A Servitude was distinguished by the Roman Jurists from a Right, and in order to convert a Servitude into a Right, some compact or stipulation to that effect was requisite. "Si quis velit vicino aliquod jus constituere, pactionibus atque stipulationibus id efficere debet"¹. The Right of innocent use is only an Imperfect Right, but under certain circumstances a Right of Innocent Use may be likewise a Right of Necessity. Thus the Midchannel of a river may be the territorial boundary between two Nations, whilst neither Nation may be able to gain access by the River to its own ports owing to the set of the current or the force of the wind without passing over portions of the river which belong to the other Nation; or the territory of a Nation may be surrounded by the territory of another Nation, and the former may have no means of access to the open Sea without passing over the Territory of the latter Nation. Thus the Territory of the Swiss Confederation is enclosed on all sides by the Territory of other Nations, so that, until the Treaty of Vienna declared the navigation of the Rhine, amongst the other Great European Rivers, to be free to all Nations, the Swiss Nation had not any into Equal and Unequal Treaties. A Treaty of Alliance upon equal conditions is made for the mutual security of the Contracting Parties, and it may be either limited to defensive purposes against a particular Enemy, in which case it was termed by the Greeks ἐπιμαχία, or it may extend to offensive as well as to defensive purposes, and it was then termed by them συμμαχία. An equal Treaty of Alliance does not necessarily contain identical conditions for each Party. Vattel draws a distinction between an Equal Treaty and an Equal Alliance. Equal Treaties, he says⁶⁴, are those in which the Contracting Parties promise the same things, or things that are equivalent, or finally things that are equitably proportioned, so that the condition of the Parties is equal. Such is, for example, a defensive Alliance, in which the Parties reciprocally stipulate for the same succours. Such is an offensive Alliance, in which it is agreed that each of the Allies shall furnish the same number of vessels, or the same number of troops, of cavalry and of infantry, or an equivalent in vessels, in troops, in artillery or in money. Such is also a League in which the Quota Pars of each of the Allies is regulated in proportion to the interest which he takes or may have in the design of the League. Thus the Emperor of the Germans and the King of England, in order to induce the States-General of the United Provinces to accede to the Treaty of Vienna (March 10, 1731), consented that the Republic should only promise to her Allies the assistance of four thousand foot and one thousand horse, though they engaged each to furnish it, in case it should be attacked, with eight thousand infantry and four thousand cavalry. Further, there may be included in this class Treaties, which stipulate that the ⁶⁴ Droit des Gens, L. II. § 172.

¹ Justiniani Inst. L. II. Tit. II. De Servitutibus.

Allies shall make common cause with one another, and act with all their forces ; although their forces may be in fact unequal, they are willing in this instance to consider them as equal. Equal Alliances on the other hand, according to Vattel, are those in which an Equal treats with an Equal, no distinction of dignity being made between the contracting Parties, whilst Unequal Alliances are those which make a difference in the dignity of the Contracting Parties. It may well happen indeed that a Treaty of Equal Alliance is not at the same time an Equal Treaty ; but it can rarely happen that a Treaty of Unequal Alliance is not at the same time an Unequal Treaty. Thus a powerful Monarch wishing to engage a weaker State in his interest, offers to it very advantageous conditions, and promises gratuitous succours, or succours disproportionate to those for which he stipulates in return, whilst he claims at the same time a superiority of dignity, and exacts proportionate respect from his Ally. It is this last condition which renders the Alliance unequal ; without such a condition the Treaty would have been unequal, but the Alliance would have been equal.

Unequal Alliances are subdivided into those which impair the Independence of one of the Contracting Parties, and those which do not impair it. The Independence of a Nation is impaired, when it gives up any of its Natural Rights; or consents to use them in absolute subordination to the will of another Nation. Thus a Nation may agree with another Nation not to make peace with a common Enemy or not to make war upon a third Party, and it does not thereby give up its Independence, but covenants to exercise a Right incident to its Independence under certain restrictions in favour of its Ally. But if a Nation agrees not to enter into a Treaty of any kind with any third Party without the consent of its Ally, the former contracts an Unequal Alliance cum diminutione imperii, for it deprives itself absolutely of a power, the possession of which is a condition sine qua non of National Independence.

§ 247. Treaties of Protection are Treaties in the nature of Unequal Alliance. They were in frequent use amongst the Greeks and Romans, and the expression in fidem se tradere is opposed by Latin authors to the phrase in servitutem se tradere. Thus Phæneas, the envoy of the Ætolians, announced to the Consul Atilius that the object of his Mission was to conclude a Treaty of Protection, and not a Treaty of Subjection to the Romans. "Non in servitutem, sed in fidem tuam nos tradimus, et certum habeo te imprudentia labi, qui nobis imperes⁶⁵." So the Numidians were considered to have placed themselves under Treaty in a relation to the Romans analogous to that in which Clients stood towards their Patrons. "Quorum in fide et in clientela Regnum (Numidia) erat⁶⁶." "As Private Protection," says Grotius⁶⁷, "took not away Personal liberty, so Public Protection does not take away Civil liberty, which cannot be conceived without Sovereignty." That the maintenance of National Independence on both sides is not inconsistent with a Treaty of Protection between two States is established by the practice of Nations in modern times. Thus the City of Danzig, with a territorial radius of two leagues, was placed by the Treaty of Tilsit⁶⁸ under the Protection of the Kings of Prussia

Treaties of Protection.

⁶⁵ Titii Livii Hist. L. XXXVI.
c. 28.

⁶⁶ Julii Flori L. III. c. 1. n. 3.

⁶⁷ De Jure B. et P., L. I. c. 3. § 21.

⁶⁸ Treaty between France and Russia, 7 July, 1807. Martens, Recueil, VIII. p. 639.

and of Saxony, without prejudice to its Independence ; so the free City of Cracow was declared by the Final Act of the Congress of Vienna, to be a Free Independent and strictly Neutral City under the protection of Prussia, Austria, and Russia. The form, under which Treaties of Protection may be concluded, varies indefinitely. Modern Treaties of Protection, for the most part, provide that the Protecting Power shall keep garrison within the Protected State, and this may be considered as the characteristic feature of a Treaty of Protection as distinguished from a Treaty of Unequal Alliance. Thus by the Treaty of Turin (Nov. 7, 1817) ⁶⁹, concluded between the King of Sardinia and the Prince of Monaco, it was stipulated that the King of Sardinia should always maintain a garrison of five hundred men at his own expense in Monaco. The King of Sardinia also undertook to defend the Prince of Monaco against foreign enemies, to include his name in Treaties of Peace with Foreign Powers, and to allow him to use the Royal Standard of Sardinia in time of War.

Treaties of Subsidy.

§ 248. Treaties of Subsidy are Treaties under which a Power, which does not take part in a war as a Principal, furnishes a limited succour to another power, as an Auxiliary. Treaties of General Alliance are to be distinguished from Treaties of Subsidy. When one State stipulates to furnish to another a limited succour of troops in return for an annual payment of money, without any provision in contemplation of an eventual engagement in general hostilities, such a Treaty does not render the State, which furnishes such limited succour, an associate in any war that the other State may undertake. The payment, which the Power, that receives such limited succour, ⁶⁹ Martens, Nouveau Supplément, II. p. 243.

makes in return, is called a Subsidy, and it was at one time the practice both of France and Great Britain to have recourse to Treaties of Subsidy with certain German Powers in order to procure troops to carry on their wars. Of this kind was the treaty of Subsidy concluded between the King of Great Britain and the Landgrave of Hesse-Darmstadt (Oct. 5, 1793)⁷⁰, under which the latter Power undertook to furnish to the former for three years a corps of 3000 troops of all arms for service in any part of Europe, in consideration of an annual Subsidy. Under the head of Treaties of Subsidy may be classed the Conventions, which formerly existed between the Helvetic Cantons and various European Powers, under which the former furnished Swiss Regiments for the service of the latter Powers. These Conventions are sometimes called Military Capitulations, and such is the name given to a Convention, which Spain concluded at Berne (Aug. 2, 1804)⁷¹ with the Helvetic Confederation for the continuous services of five Regiments during the space of thirty years. There is another use of the phrase Treaty of Subsidy which must not be overlooked. A Treaty of Subsidy becomes virtually a Treaty of Alliance, when one Power enters into an agreement with another Power, that the latter shall furnish troops to fight against a Third Power, on condition of the former finding money for the maintenance of them. A Treaty of Subsidy for such an object is sometimes incorporated with a Treaty of Alliance. Thus we have a Convention of Alliance and Subsidy concluded at Reichenbach (June 15, 1813)⁷², between Great Britain, Russia, and Prussia, under which the former Power engaged herself to furnish 1,133,334 pounds sterling, before the expiration of twelve months, and to maintain the Russian fleet, which was at such time in the Ports of Great Britain, at an estimated expenditure of 550,000 pounds sterling. A Subsidy is sometimes an alternative provision in a Treaty of Alliance. Thus under the Treaty of Alliance concluded at Berlin⁷³ (April 15, 1788), between the States-General of the United Provinces and Prussia, the former Power had the alternative of furnishing money, if it could not furnish troops. A separate Convention of Subsidy is sometimes agreed to as supplemental to a Military Convention; this practice is generally observed when all the parties to the Military Convention are not at the same time parties to the Convention of Subsidy. Thus after a Military Convention had been concluded between Sardinia, Great Britain, and France at Turin (Jan. 26, 1855), a supplemental Treaty of Subsidy was concluded between Sardinia and Great Britain⁷⁴, under which the Queen of Great Britain undertook to recommend to her Parliament to advance by way of loan to the King of Sardinia the sum of one million pounds sterling. The King of Sardinia had agreed, under the previous Military Convention, to furnish for the service of the war against Russia a corps of 15,000 men; and France and Great Britain had in return guaranteed the integrity of the dominions of the King of Sardinia, and engaged themselves to defend them against every attack pending the war.

⁷⁰ Martens, Recueil, V. p. 524.

⁷¹ Martens, Recueil, VIII. p. 228. Capitulations of this kind are forbidden under the present Constitution of the Swiss Confederation. "Il ne peut-être conclu de capitulations militaires." Art. XI.

Treaties of Guaranty.

§ 249. Treaties of Guaranty are Compacts under which a State promises to aid another State, if it should be disturbed in the enjoyment of a Conventional Right as distinguished from a Natural Right. When a Treaty of Peace is concluded, which proceeds upon a settlement of territorial boundary, it is not unfrequent to invoke the Guaranty of one or more powerful States to maintain the weaker of the two contracting Parties in the State of Possession established by the Treaty. "When those," says Vattel, "who make a Treaty of Peace or any other Treaty are not perfectly easy with respect to its observance, they require the Guaranty of a powerful Sovereign. The Guarantor promises to maintain the conditions of the Treaty and to cause it to be observed. As he may find himself obliged to make use of force against the party who attempts to violate his promises, it is an engagement that no Sovereign ought to enter into lightly and without good reason. Princes indeed seldom enter into it, unless when they have an indirect interest in the observance of the Treaty, or are induced by particular relations of friendship. The Guaranty may be promised equally to all the contracting parties, to some of them, or even to one of them alone, but it is commonly promised to all in general. It may also happen when several Sovereigns enter into a common alliance that they all reciprocally pledge themselves to each other, as Guarantors for its observance. The Guaranty is a kind of Treaty by which assistance and succour are promised to some one, in case he has need of them, in order to compel a faithless Ally to fulfil his engagements⁷⁵."

⁷² Martens, N. R. I. p. 568. ⁷³ Martens, Recueil, IV. p. 379.

⁷⁴ Martens, N. R. Gén. XV. p. 613.

"The term Guaranty," continues the same writer, "is often taken in a sense somewhat different from that we have given to it. For instance, most of the Powers of Europe guaranteed the Act, by which Charles VI had regulated the Succession to his dominions, and Sovereigns sometimes reciprocally guarantee their respective States. But we should rather denominate those transactions Treaties of Alliance for the purpose, in the former case, of maintaining the Rule of Succession under the Pragmatic Sanction ; and in the latter, of supporting the State of Possession of a Friendly Power⁷⁶."

⁷⁵ Droit des Gens, L. II. c. 15. § 235.

To the same effect Klüber⁷⁷ writes, "L'une des plus usitées des Conventions, dont, nous nous occupons, est la Garantie proprement dite, par laquelle un État promet de prêter secours à un autre État, dans le cas où celui-ci serait lésé ou menacé d'un préjudice dans l'exercice de Droits déterminés par le fait d'une tierce puissance. La Garantie est toujours promise par rapport à une tierce puissance, de la part de laquelle il pourrait être porté préjudice à des droits acquis." . . . § 158. "Lorsque la Garantie est destinée à assurer l'inviolabilité d'un Traité, elle forme toujours une obligation et un Traité accessoire (pactum accessorium), même quand elle ferait partie de l'acte principal." . . . § 159. "Les Garanties sont générales ou spéciales, selon que tous les droits d'une espèce déterminée, ou toutes les possessions d'un État, ou toutes les stipulations contenues dans un Traité, ou bien une partie seulement de ces droits, possessions, ou stipulations, sont garantis. Tantôt elles sont stipulées pour toujours, tantôt pour un temps déterminé. Dans le cas d'une lésion du droit garanti, ne fût elle même qu'imminente encore, le Garant, sur l'invitation qui doit lui en être faite, est tenu de prêter le secours promis, à condition cependant que le provoquant en garantie ait lui-même le droit de se défendre, ou de se faire raison à soi-même, et toujours sans porter préjudice aux droits d'aucun tiers (salvo jure tertii). Le garant n'a ni droit ni obligation de faire davantage que de prêter l'assistance promise."

⁷⁶ Droit des Gens, L. II. § 228. ⁷⁷ Droit des Gens, §§ 157-159.

An International Guaranty is thus strictly concerned with International Rights, even where the subject of the Guaranty may be a Rule of Succession, as in the case of the Pragmatic Sanction of Charles VI, or the undisturbed possession of Territory, as in the case of the Germanic Confederation, equally as when it is given by a third party to a Treaty of Peace, such as the Guaranty of his Britannic Majesty to the Treaty of Peace made at Utrecht in 1715 between the Crowns of Spain and Portugal. For instance, when Foreign Powers were invited to guaranty the Pragmatic Sanction, it was not intended that such Guaranty should affect the Political Independence of the Austrian Crown, so as to limit in any way its right to rescind or modify the Rule of Succession; but that the Guarantying Powers should support the daughter of Charles VI against any Foreign Power, which should attempt in its character of a Foreign Power to disturb her in the peaceable enjoyment of the Rights secured to her by the Pragmatic Sanction.

No rule of International Law is more clear than that a Convention of Guaranty nude and absolute does not apply to the case of Political changes. If, for instance, Denmark had guaranteed to the Princess Anne of England the undisturbed possession of the British throne upon the death of William III, contra quoscunque, no casus fœderis would have arisen, if the Highlanders of Scotland had attempted to restore the Crown to the son of James II ; but if Louis XIV or Philip V, as Foreign Powers, had sent an army to cooperate with the insurgents in depriving the Princess Anne of the Succession, there would have been at once an undeniable Casus Fœderis. Even an expression so indefinite as contra quoscunque is limited by the nature of the subject matter ; it may apply to the slightest International interference, from whatever quarter it may be threatened, but even a Civil War will not extend its operation to Political troubles.

Such an expression is found in the eleventh article of the Treaty of Gottorp of 26th June, 1715, concluded between the King of Great Britain, as Duke of Brunswick-Luneburg (Elector of Hanover), and King Frederick IV of Denmark, by which "his Royal Majesty in Great Britain engages and obliges himself, for his heirs and successors, to maintain King Frederic IV, his heirs and successors, in the occupation, enjoyment, and possession of the Ducal part of the Duchy of Schleswig contra quoscunque in the most effective manner, and to guaranty assistance ; and to that end on every occasion, when need shall require it and it shall be demanded of His Royal Majesty in Great Britain on the part of the King of Denmark, within six weeks a die requisitionis to furnish without fail the assistance determined in the next preceding article, and otherwise, according to the exigency of circumstances, to assist with all his might and all his power."

In consideration of this Guaranty Denmark gave up to the Elector of Hanover the Duchies of Bremen and Verden which she had conquered from Sweden in 1712, and which Hanover has retained down to the present day ; and Hanover on her part united her forces with those of Denmark, and thereby contributed to bring about the Treaty of Stockholm, of June 3, 1720, and which Denmark would not consent to ratify, until she had obtained the separate acts of Guaranty on the part of the Kings of Great Britain and France on the 26th July and 8th August of the same year ⁷⁸.

A Guaranty, being given in favour of one of the Contracting Parties to a Territorial settlement, does not authorise the Guarantying Power to interfere in the enforcement of the settlement, unless his interference should be invoked. If the Contracting Parties choose to vary the settlement, they have a right to do so, and the Guarantying Power cannot oppose it; the obligation upon the latter to support the Party, who should complain of the infringement of the settlement, does not carry with it a right to interfere without invitation; for the Guaranty was not given for the advantage of the Guarantying Power, otherwise it would have been a Principal in the Contract. Vattel ⁷⁹ observes that it is of great importance to keep in mind the distinction in this respect between a Treaty of Guaranty and a Treaty of Alliance, lest under colour of a Guaranty, a powerful Nation should claim to be arbiter of the affairs of its neighbours, and pretend to give law to them.

Sir Robert Phillimore ⁸⁰ seems to doubt the soundness of the position, that a Convention of Guaranty does not apply to Political changes, and lays stress ⁷⁸ Twiss on the Relations of the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein to the Crown of Denmark and the Germanic Confederation, p. 124.

⁷⁹ Droit des Gens, L. II. c. 16. § 286.

⁸⁰ Commentaries on International Law, T. II. § 57.

upon a passage in Vattel ⁸¹, in which that writer says, "An Ally ought doubtless to be defended against every invasion, against every foreign violence, and even against his rebellious Subjects." It may however well happen that Sovereign Princes are at liberty to enter into Treaties of Alliance for mutual assistance against their own Subjects, if they should revolt; as, for instance, the Sovereign Princes and Free Cities of Germany as members of the late Germanic Confederation entered into a League ⁸², under which they bound themselves to intervene, if the Subjects of any Confederate State should revolt, and yet it might consist with Reason, that a Convention of nude and absolute Guaranty, contra quoscunque, would not extend to Political Troubles. Again, the second Treaty of Barrier ⁸³, (Jan. 30, 1713,) under which the Dutch engaged themselves to give aid to Queen Anne and her Successors to the British Crown, being Protestants, according to the order of Succession as established by the Parliament of England, against all such States and Persons as should attempt by open war, or by secret conspiracy, or by treason to set aside the Succession so established, is relieved of all ambiguity by its very speciality; for it is not a Treaty of nude and absolute Guaranty, contra quoscunque, but a specific Treaty of Aid and Succour, (ipsi Reginæ opitulaturos ad pugnandum pro jure Successionis ad Coronam,) promised to the Queen herself, and after her death to her lawful heirs, under circumstances specified either of Foreign war, or of Civil tumult.

⁸¹ Vattel, L. II. c. 12. § 197.

⁸² Final Act of the Germanic Confederation. Art. XXV, and XXVI. Martens, N. R. V. p. 489.

⁸³ Schmauss, Corpus Jur. p. 1287. Sir Robert Phillimore refers to this Treaty, which Lord Liverpool terms a Defensive Alliance.

The Treaty concluded in London⁸⁴ on May 7, 1832, between France, Great Britain and Russia on one part, and Bavaria on the other part, provides that Greece, under the Sovereignty of Prince Otho, and under the Guaranty of the three Courts, should form a Monarchical and Independent State. It is obvious, that such a Guaranty cannot be construed as a Guaranty to King Otho against a Rebellion of his Subjects, but only as a Guaranty of the Independence of his Throne; which is a matter strictly within the province of an International Guaranty.

§ 250. Treaties of Neutrality are Treaties under which either the absolute Neutrality of a Nation is agreed upon, or particular acts of Neutrality on its part are covenanted for. The Swiss Confederation and the Kingdom of Belgium are States, of which the absolute Neutrality is made a matter of Treaty-stipulation between all the Great Powers of Europe. Accordingly, no State is entitled to demand of either of these States under the General Law of Nations, that it should allow a free passage to its troops for belligerent purposes through its Territory. In the case of Nations which have agreed to observe particular acts of Neutrality, such obligations have reference for the most part to Rights under the General Law of Nations, which a Neutral Power has an option to enforce or not, as it shall think fit. Such, for instance, were the provisions of the Treaty⁸⁵ of Amity, Commerce, and Navigation, concluded between Great Britain and the United States of America Nov. 19, 1794, but not ratified by the latter Power until Oct. 28, 1795. By the Twenty-fifth Article of this Treaty it was provided, "that neither of the said Parties

Treaties of Neutrality.

⁸⁴ Martens, N. Recueil, X. p. 550.

⁸⁵ Martens, Recueil, V. p. 68.

shall permit the ships or goods belonging to the subjects or citizens of the other, to be taken within cannon shot of the Coast, nor in any of the Bays, Ports, or Rivers of their Territory by ships of war, or others having commission from any Prince, Republic, or State whatever. But in case it should so happen, the Party, whose Territorial Rights shall thus have been violated, shall use its utmost endeavours to obtain from the offending Party, full and ample satisfaction for the vessel or vessels so taken, whether the same be vessels of war, or merchant vessels."

There have been Treaties of Armed Neutrality between Neutral States pending war between belligerent Powers, the object of which has been to give mutual aid to each other in maintaining the Rights of Neutrals under the General Law of Nations. These and other matters touching Neutrality are more fully discussed in their appropriate place in a subsequent volume, in connection with the Rights and Duties of Nations in time of War.

Conclusion
and Ratification of Treaties.

§ 251. There are certain International Compacts or Conventions which are distinguishable from Treaties (Fœdera) properly so called ; being concluded not in virtue of an express delegation of Full Powers from a Nation to that purpose, but in virtue of an implied delegation of Full Powers, as incidental to an Official Station. Thus the Commander of an army has an implied delegation of Full Powers to suspend or limit the operation of hostilities by means of Truces for the suspension of arms, of Cartels for the exchange of prisoners, and of Capitulations for the surrender of troops or fortresses. Conventions for such purposes do not require any Ratification on the part of the Supreme Power of the State. It is otherwise, however, with regard to a definitive Treaty of Peace.

A definitive Treaty of Peace, according to the usage of Nations, requires Ratification, and although every Treaty is operative from the date of its signature, unless it contains an express provision to the contrary, yet its operation is suspended until the exchange of Ratifications shall have taken place, whereupon the Treaty acquires validity from the date of its signature. There is, however, an exception to the rule of a Treaty taking effect from the date of its signature in regard to treaties stipulating for the Cession of Territory. In the case of such Treaties they only take full effect upon the actual Cession (traditio) of the Territory itself. Thus the National Character of a Territory for commercial purposes continues unaltered, notwithstanding it may have been ceded by Treaty, as long as it continues in the actual possession of the State which has agreed to cede it⁸⁶. Upon the actual change of the State of Possession, the National Character of the inhabitants undergoes a corresponding change. It may happen after a Treaty has been signed by the Plenipotentiary of a Nation, that grave circumstances occur, under which the provisions of the Treaty may be likely to have a prejudicial effect upon the interests of that Nation, which were not known at the time of signature. Under such circumstances the Sovereign Power of a Nation is by Usage justified in declining to ratify the Treaty. Thus the King of the Netherlands refused in 1841 to ratify a Treaty for the incorporation of Luxembourg into the Customs' Union of the Germanic States on the ground of the injurious effects that it was likely to exercise upon the commercial interests of his subjects, which had been brought to his knowledge subsequently to the signature of the Treaty. So the King of the French declined in 1841 to ratify the Quadruple Treaty for the suppression of the Slave Trade on account of the objections raised against it in the French Chambers. So Great Britain declined in 1859 to ratify a Treaty which her Minister Plenipotentiary had concluded with Nicaragua, and Nicaragua in the same year declined to ratify her Convention with Great Britain for the settlement of the Grey Town and Mosquito Question. If, however, there should be an express provision that the preliminary engagements shall take effect immediately without waiting for the exchange of Ratifications, such a Treaty will be an exception to the rule. We have an instance of such a Treaty in the Convention concluded at London⁸⁷ (15 July, 1840) for the pacification of the Levant between Great Britain, Austria, Prussia, and Russia, on the one part, and the Ottoman Porte on the other, to which there was annexed a Reserved Protocol of the same date, providing that the preliminary measures, mentioned in the Second Article of the Convention, should be put into execution immediately (tout de suite) and without waiting for the exchange of Ratifications.

⁸⁶ The Fama, § Robinson, p. 106.

Termination and Renewal

§ 252. Treaties properly so called, the engagements of which imply a state of Amity between the Contracting Parties, cease to operate if War supervenes, unless there are express stipulations to the contrary. It is usual on the signature of a Treaty of Peace for Nations to renew expressly their previous Treaties, if they intend that any of them should become once more operative. Great Britain in practice admits of no exception to the rule that all Treaties, as such, are put an end to by a subsequent war between the Contracting Parties⁸⁸. It was accordingly the practice of the European Powers before the French Revolution of 1789, on the conclusion of every war, which supervened upon the Treaty of Utrecht, to renew and confirm that Treaty, under which the distribution of Territory amongst the principal European States had been settled with the view of securing an European Equilibrium.

⁸⁷ Martens, N. R. Gén. I. p. 156.

In the Treaty of Paris (30 March, 1856) there occurs a provision which is equivalent in its effect to the renewal of previous Treaties, under which it has been agreed that, until the Treaties or Conventions which existed before the war between the Belligerent Powers shall have been renewed or replaced by new arrangements, the commercial intercourse between the subjects of the various Powers shall be reciprocally maintained on the same footing as before the war, and their subjects in all other matters shall be respectively treated upon the footing of the most favoured Nation⁸⁹. In the Treaty of Zurich, concluded between France, Austria, and Sardinia⁹⁰ (10 Nov. 1859), all the Treaties and Conventions concluded between Austria and Sardinia, which were in force before April 1, 1859, are confirmed, so far as the Treaty itself does not derogate from them, but the Two Powers undertake to submit in the course of a year those Treaties and Conventions to a General Revision, in order to introduce, by common accord, the modifications which may be thought conformable to the interests of both countries. There is, however, no corresponding provision either in this Treaty, or in the separate Treaty of ⁸⁸ Lord Bathurst's Letter of Oct. 30, 1815. Twiss' Oregon Question, p. 188.

⁸⁹ Art. XXXI. Martens, N. R. Gén. XV. p. 780.

⁹⁰ Ibid. XVI. Part 11. p. 536.

Peace of the same date and place concluded between France and Austria, whereby the Treaties and Conventions between those Two Powers, if any such were in force before April 1st, 1859¹, are confirmed.

¹ Recueil des Traités et Conventions conclus par l'Autriche avec les Puissances Etrangères, depuis 1763 jusqu'à nos jours, par Léopold Neumann, Leipzig, 1855-59. This collection of Treaties contains special Treaties of Commerce and Navigation, of Extra-Tradition, and of Postal Service, concluded between France and Austria, determinable every Five Years at the pleasure of either Party.

CHAPTER XIV.

CAPITULATIONS OF THE OTTOMAN PORTE.

Early Phœnician and Greek Factories in Egypt—An Amalphitan Factory at Alexandria in the ninth century—Pisan Capitulation of 1173—Mahommedan Factory at Canton in the ninth century—System of personal Laws throughout Europe—National Autonomy allowed to the Mahommedans in Constantinople by the Emperors of the East—Analogous privileges allowed by the Ottomans to the Venetians in Constantinople in 1454—National Autonomy secured to the French by the Treaty of 1535, confirmed by Treaties of 1740 and 1861—Privileges assured to English subjects in the Ottoman dominions in 1580, confirmed by Treaties of 1675 and 1861—Similar privileges granted to the Dutch in 1612, confirmed by Treaty of 1862—Austrian Capitulations—Treaty of Passarowitz of 1718, confirmed to Austria-Hungary by Treaty of 22 May, 1862—Prussian Capitulations of 1761, confirmed by Treaty of 20 March, 1862—Swedish Capitulations of 1737, confirmed by Treaty of 5 March, 1862—Danish Capitulations of 1756, confirmed by Treaties of 1841 and 1862—Spanish Capitulations of 1782, confirmed by Treaty of 13 March, 1862—Russian Capitulations of 1774 and of 1783, confirmed by Treaty of 3 February, 1862—Capitulations with the Kingdom of Italy of 1861—Belgian Capitulations of 1838 and of 1840, confirmed by Treaty of 1861—Portuguese Capitulations of 1843, confirmed by Treaty of 1868—Greek Capitulations of 1855—Capitulations with the United States of America of 1830, confirmed by Treaty of 25 February, 1862—Treaty with the Empire of Brazil of 5 February, 1858—Origin of the term Capitulations—Covenant of Mahomet, the Messenger of God, with the Christians, A.D. 625—Capitulation of the Kaliph Omar, A.D. 636—Treaty of Paris of 1856—A special Platform of Conventional Law between Christendom and Islam—Adherence of the Porte to the First Protocol of the Conferences of London of 1871.

§ 253. IN the preceding Chapter on the Right of ^{Early} Treaty we have briefly touched upon a certain class ^{Phœnician} of Treaties, that have been found to be highly con- ^{and Greek} ^{Factories in} ^{Egypt.}

venient, if not indispensable for the maintenance of commercial intercourse between nations, which recognise neither the ties of a common Religion nor the sanctions of a common Law. Treaties of this character are not of novel device, as their origin may be traced back to a period, when race or nationality rather than territory was the basis of a community of law. An identity of religious worship seems to have been in the earliest times a necessary condition of international amity. The barbarian was outside the pale of religion, but the stranger was entitled to hospitality, if he worshipped the same gods. On the other hand, the necessities of international commerce gave rise by degrees to religious tolerance, under which there grew up a certain international comity, and merchants were permitted to establish factories in foreign Countries without any intention of settling there permanently. Thus we find that the merchants of Tyre, who were strangers to the religion of Egypt, were nevertheless permitted in the twelfth century before Christ to establish trading factories in three different cities on the Tanitic branch of the Nile, where they were allowed the privilege of living under their own laws, and of worshipping according to their own religious rites. Two centuries later we meet with the legend of Iphigenia, according to which the virgin daughter of Agamemnon, the leader of the Greek host, was transported by the goddess Artemis to the shores of the Black Sea, there to become the priestess of a Greek temple, in which her countrymen, whom commerce attracted to the Crimea, might henceforth worship according to their own religious rites. The Greeks from this time gradually acquired the command of the corn trade of the Black Sea, and recruited their mercantile fleets with the best sailors of the Ægean. In alluding to these two facts we are travelling beyond the limits of strictly historical ground; but the horizon becomes more clear as it becomes more extensive, and we are within the limits of authentic Greek history, when Herodotus steps upon the scene, at which time the Greeks were beginning to participate in the vast trade with Egypt, which had from ancient time been engrossed by the merchants of Tyre. (The importance of the Phœnician factories in Egypt had begun to decline after Pharaoh Necho lost his possessions in Syria; and his immediate successor, King Amasis, found himself constrained to adopt a change in the foreign policy of Egypt, and to seek in an alliance with Greece a support against the encroachment of the growing Persian Empire. It was with this motive that he invited the merchants of Hellas to establish a factory on the right bank of the Canopic branch of the Nile, where they might live as a distinct community under their own laws and worshipping their own gods. The Greeks themselves gave to this factory the name of Naucratis, and the remains of the town which grew up around the factory, may be traced in the present day in the village of Desūk, on the right bank of what is now called the Rosetta arm of the River, where the stream is of considerable width.)

The Persians, under Cambyses, shortly after the death of Amasis, became the masters of Egypt, and the descendants of Amasis during two centuries endeavouring in vain with the aid of Greek Auxiliaries to shake off the Persian yoke, against which they attempted an unsuccessful revolt at the time when Herodotus was travelling in Egypt. It is upon his testimony that we may assume that the privileged commerce of the Greeks at Naucratis was maintained without any great diminutions during that troubled period; and it was not until the raison d'être of a Greek factory on the Canopic branch of the Nile had ceased upon the conquest of Egypt by Alexander the Great, and the founding of the neighbouring City of Alexandria, that Naucratis disappears from history, having been superseded by the greater facilities for foreign trade which Alexandria supplied. It had been already observed in the time of Herodotus, that the vast deposits of the Nile were carried eastward by the set of the current of the Mediterranean Sea, and were gradually silting up the mouths of the river; and it was doubtless a knowledge of this circumstance that led Alexander the Great to form his new seaport at the western extremity of the Coast of the Delta.

An Amalphitan Factory at Alexandria in the ninth century.

§ 254. Twelve centuries passed away after the death of Alexander the Great before an occasion arose in Egypt for the admission of foreign merchants to the privilege of a trading factory under magistrates of their own nationality. Many writers have considered the Treaties which the Emperor Charlemagne concluded with the Sultan Haroun al Raschid in the ninth century, under which France claims to exercise a guardianship over the Holy Places in Jerusalem, to be the true starting-point of the Jurisdiction exercised in the present day by European Consuls in the Levant. This may be a probable opinion as regards Syria and the Holy Land, but as regards Egypt the merchants of Amalphi in Italy are with good reason reputed to have obtained from the Caliphs of Egypt towards the end of the ninth century the privilege of trading at Alexandria under a Consul of their own nationality, and to have been the first Christian merchants to whom such a privilege was conceded. No copy however has been preserved of the text of such a privilege in favour of the Amalphitans¹, and the earliest text known to exist of any so-called Capitulations is a text of which the preservation is vouched by Gatteschi², but it is not to be found in the body of Ottoman International Law, published by Aristarchi Bey in 1875. The text in question is that of a treaty Pisan Capitulation of 1173. concluded in 1173 between Saladin, Sultan of Egypt, and the Republic of Pisa before Saladin accomplished the conquest of the Latin Kingdom of Jerusalem.

There is no improbability in the tradition that the Amalphitans obtained the privilege of a factory at Alexandria in the latter part of the ninth century, seeing that the Arab merchants of Egypt had themselves obtained in the earlier part of that century the privilege of a factory at Kanfou (Canton) within the Chinese Empire, where they were permitted to live under a Mahommedan Kadi, and to have their disputes settled by him in accordance with Mahommedan law. Mahommedan Factory at Canton in the ninth century. Of this fact we have a perfectly trustworthy record in the narrative of a famous Arab historian, Ali Abou'l Hassan Mas'oudy, who died in Egypt A.D. 956³.

¹ The State Records of Amalphi were destroyed by the Pisans when they sacked Amalphi in 1137, but there are private records of voyages made to Egypt by Amalphitan citizens in the year 978, and the Amalphitans obtained through the intercession of the Kaliphs of Egypt the privilege of building a church in Jerusalem, A.D. 1020, and a hospital, of which the brethren ultimately became the nucleus of the Order of the Knights Hospitallers of Jerusalem.

² Manuale di Diritto Pubblico e Privato Ottomano, p. 1.

³ The MS. of this narrative is preserved in the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris. It was translated into French by Eusebius Renaudot in 1718, and subsequently into English in 1735.

System of Personal Laws
throughout Europe.

§ 255. Meanwhile the various races of Western Europe, after the breaking up of the Roman Empire of the West, had come to live under a system of personal laws. The change originated in Spain after the conquest of that country by the Visigoths in the fifth century after Christ. It was followed in Italy, where, to use the language of Cassiodorus, the famous Calabrian secretary of King Theodoric the Great, who founded the Kingdom of the Ostrogoths in Italy (453-466), the Roman was a judge for the Roman and the Goth for the Goth, and under a diversity of judges justice was equally administered to all. The mercantile communities were no exception to this great revolution in the system of European Law, and as the Roman Law fell into desuetude, local customs grew up in the chief commercial cities of Spain and of Italy, which came to be regarded by the citizens as of paramount obligation, so that the saying became general "ubi consuetudo loquitur, lex tacet." Hence it became of the first importance, as their merchants were required to observe the good custom of their fellow-citizens, even when they were commorant in a foreign country, that they should obtain the privilege of living, when abroad, under their own magistrates, who could settle their disputes according to their own good usages. We find accordingly that it was thought to be no disparagement to the Sovereignty of the Latin Kings of Jerusalem that they should allow in the eleventh century to the Genoese in the first instance, and then to the Venetians and the Pisans, and subsequently to the Amalphitans, the privilege of occupying a separate quarter in each of the chief maritime cities of Syria, where they could carry on their commerce under the exclusive jurisdiction of their own magistrates. The institution, however, of the trading factory was not confined to the ports of the Mediterranean. It had become general on the part of the maritime communities of the North Sea and of the Baltic, and it was for the use of their factories in foreign countries that the great mercantile cities of Northern Europe drew up the various Codes of Mercantile and Maritime Law, of which the texts have been edited with great care and judgment by M. Pardessus in his valuable "Collection de Lois Maritimes antérieures au dixhuitième Siècle." Amongst the most remarkable of these factories was the factory established by the merchants of Wisby at Nowogorod, in Russia, in the twelfth century, where they were allowed to live under their own laws, administered by their own magistrates; and that this was looked upon as a normal condition of international commerce in those days may be inferred from the fact, that in the Latin text of the privilege granted by the Duke of Nowogorod in the thirteenth century to the merchants of Wisby it was stipulated that the merchants of Nowogorod should enjoy the same liberties and rights whenever they came into Gothland⁴.

Returning to the shores of the Mediterranean, where, notwithstanding the mutual hatred which the Crusades had engendered between the Christian and the Moslem, the Saracenic conquerors of Asia had granted to the merchants of the Italian Republics the privilege of living in communities apart from the natives of the country, we find that the Christians reciprocated this privilege in favour of the Mahommedans, and that for sixty years before Constantinople passed

National
autonomy allowed to the Mahommedans at Constantinople by the Emperors of the East.

⁴ Ædem libertates et jura dantur favorabiliter et benignè. Nogardiensibus cum in Gothlandiam venerint in omnibus impen- dreyer. De inhumano jure nau- fragii, p. 172.

under the dominion of the Ottomans, a Mahomedan Community was allowed to reside there under a Kadi, who administered justice to them according to Mahomedan law, and they were further permitted to build a Mosque and to worship therein according to their own religious rites.

Analogous Privileges allowed by the Ottomans to the Venetians at Constantinople in 1454.

It need not therefore excite any surprise that, in the very next year after the Sultan Mahomet II had established the supremacy of the Crescent over the Cross in the ancient capital of the Christian Empire of the East, he should have granted to the merchants, both of Genoa and of Venice, the same privileges of national autonomy which they had enjoyed under the Christian Emperors. The Genoese, for instance, had previously obtained from the Greek Emperors as far back as A.D. 1204 the privilege of exclusively occupying, under their own magistrates, a suburb of Constantinople, from which, as a basis of commercial operations, they had pushed forward their factories along the southern shore of the Black Sea, whilst the Venetians had obtained as far back as A.D. 1060 the privilege of sending magistrates of their own nationality to Constantinople to administer justice to their countrymen both in civil and criminal matters. Further, a golden diploma (bullæ aurea) of the Emperor Alexis III, of the date of A.D. 1199, which has been published by Marin⁵, had extended to the Venetians the further privilege, that their judges should decide all disputes between citizens of Venice and subjects of the Greek Empire. This enlarged privilege appears to have been enjoyed by the Venetian merchants in the ports of Syria from a still earlier period, as may be inferred from a treaty of A.D. 1117, cited by Foscarini⁶.

⁵ Storia civile e politica del 188. Miltitz, Manuel des Consuls, Commercio de' Veneziani, iii. p. Tom. I. Appendice No. 4.

Such then having been the general practice in the Levant, before Constantinople passed under the dominion of the Moslem, it would seem to have been a matter of course that the Christian States of Western Europe, which were anxious to secure to their merchants the continuance of a trade which had hitherto been extremely lucrative, should have sought at the hands of the Ottoman Sultans the renewal of the national autonomy heretofore conceded to them by the Christian Emperors. We find, accordingly, that the Sultan Mahomet II, at the request of the Genoese, renewed to them before the conclusion of the year A.D. 1453 the privileges heretofore enjoyed by their merchants, and in the next following year, A.D. 1454, renewed to the Venetian merchants in like manner their privileges. The text of the Genoese privileges, which are said by Sauli⁷ to have been granted under the form of a Firman, or, in other words, of an ordinance under the tougra or monogram of the Sultan, has not come down to our time, but the text of the Venetian privileges has been preserved, and it has been usual to describe these privileges, which are in the form of treaty-engagements, by the title of "Capitulations." Whether this title means anything more than "Articles," seeing that the text is divided into "Articles," or "Capita," or whether the word "Capitulations" was the Frank translation of the Arabic term "Soulhh," which means "a truce," will be discussed hereafter, but it cannot well be disputed, that the document

⁶ Pardessus, Lois Maritimes, novesi in Galata, Tom. II. l. 3. Tom. V. p. 3. p. 127.

⁷ Sauli, Della Colonia dei Ge- which contains the Venetian privileges of 1454 is in the nature of a bilateral contract, to which the Sultan Mahmoud Bey and the Seigneurie Ducale de Venise were the signatory parties.

There is no mention of a Consul by name in the Venetian Capitulations of 1454, the clause as to the national autonomy of the Venetian Merchants being of this tenor: Art. 16. "Que la même Seigneurie pût à son gré envoyer à Constantinople un Bailli avec sa Suite, suivant l'usage, lequel ait la liberté de régir en civil, et de gouverner, et administrer la justice entre ses Venitiens de toute condition; le Sultan s'engageant de faire en sorte que le Pacha ou Séraskier de la Roumélie accorde toute faveur au dit bailli chaque fois qu'il en sera requis pour faire son office*." An important recital in this Article deserves notice from an international point of view, namely, that the privilege accorded to the Venetians of a national autonomy is recognised to be according to usage (selon usage). Although, however, there is no mention of a Consul by name in this Treaty, there is no doubt that Venetian Merchants enjoyed in the same century in the provincial parts of the Ottoman Empire the privilege of living under the jurisdiction of a Consul of their own nationality, inasmuch as in the Capitulations between the Republic of Florence and Kait Bey, the last of the independent Mameluke Sultans of Egypt in 1488, there is an article securing to the Florentine Consuls the same privileges and prerogatives as were then enjoyed by the Venetian Consuls, as well in respect of honour as of jurisdiction* (Article XII).

* Gatteschi, Manuale di Diritto Ottomano, p. 16; also Aristarchi Bey, Droit International Ottoman, Tom. IV. p. 237.

* Les Capitulations et la Réforme Judiciaire, par J. C. Aristide Gavillot. Paris, 1875, p. 21.

§ 256. The independence of the Mameluke Sultans of Egypt ceased in 1517, upon the death of the Sultan el-Ghúri on the battle-field of Dabik, fighting against the army of the Osman Sultan, Selim I. Shortly afterwards Cairo was taken by storm, and Sultan Selim compelled Mutawakkil, the last scion of the family of the Abasside Kaliphs, to convey to him his nominal supremacy, and thereby his title to the office of Kaliph, the spiritual and temporal chief of Islam. Henceforth the Sultans of Constantinople have been supreme in the Levant, and France, in entering into an alliance with the Porte, thought it well to secure for herself, by treaty, a confirmation of the ancient privileges heretofore enjoyed by the Venetians, and to include under her protection the subjects of all the Christian Princes of Europe, with the exception of those of the Emperor Charles V. The document under which the French protection was recognised by the Porte, is in the form of a treaty, concluded A.D. 1535, between King Francis I of France and the Sultan Suleiman II, under the third Article of which it was provided, that "Toutes fois que le Roi mandera à Constantinople ou à Pera ou aux autres lieux de cet Empire un Baile, comme de présent il tient un Consul à Alexandrie, que les dits Baile et Consul soient acceptés et entretenus en autorité convenante, de manière que chacun d'eux en son lieu et selon leur foi et loi, sans qu'aucun Juge, Kadi, Soubachi ou autre en empêche, doive et puisse ouir, juger et terminer, tant au civil qu'au criminel, toutes les causes, les procès ou différends, qui naitront entre marchands et autres sujets du Roi." By a further article of this Treaty, power was reserved to his Holiness the Pope, to the King of England the brother and ally

National
autonomy assured to the French by the Treaty
of 1535.

of the King of France, and to the King of Scotland, to accede to the Treaty, if they thought fit, within eight months. The Turkish original of this Treaty is lost, as well as several original Letters-patent or Capitulations between the Porte and France; but a French and Italian text of this Treaty are preserved in the Archives of the French Department of Foreign Affairs, from which we have cited the Third Article as above¹⁰. There seems, however, to have been another version of this Treaty, the Turkish text of which was known to Mouradjea d'Ohsan¹¹, and which contains certain stipulations not found in the French text, the fourth of which is of this tenor: "Que les autres Nations Européennes, comme les Anglais, les Catalans, les Ragusais, les Siciliens, les Génois, les Portugais, &c., dont les Gouvernements n'étaient pas liés avec la Porte par des traités d'amitié, pourraient naviguer sous le pavillon français dans toutes les mers et trafiquer sous la protection de la France dans tous les pays de la domination Ottomane;" and the fifth article purports to be as follows: "Que les Français jouiraient du libre exercice de leur culte, et qu'ils feraient garder les Saints Lieux de la Palestine par des religieux Catholiques." Both these Articles deserve attention, as they throw light on the position maintained by France at the present time with regard to the Protectorate asserted by her over the Holy Places in Jerusalem, as well as over vessels sailing under what is called ¹⁰ The French and Italian texts, as preserved in the French Archives, are set out by Charrière in his Négotiations de la France avec le Levant, Paris 1848, Tom. I. p. 293, and the French text is given by Baron de Testa in his Recueil des Traités de la Porte Ottomane, T. I. p. 15.

¹¹ Tableau Général de l'Empire Ottoman par Mouradjea d'Ohsan. Paris, 1791. Tom. VII. p. 470.

the Flag of Jerusalem, otherwise the Flag of the Latin Convents in Jerusalem. It would be idle to speculate in the present day as to what is the true explanation of the difference between the version which Mouradjea d'Ohsson had before him, and the version of the Treaty of 1535 of which a copy is preserved in the French Archives. The Treaty of 1535, according to the rule of Ottoman law, expired on the death of Suleiman II, and the historian of the Ottoman Empire, Baron von Hammer, enumerates not less than eleven renewals of the Treaty of 1535, which preceded the Treaty of 1740, which latter Treaty continues to be operative in the present day¹²; and each renewal gave occasion for the insertion of fresh Articles. It is a permissible conjecture that the Articles which Mouradjea d'Ohsson enumerates were new articles, possibly added on the renewal of the Treaty of 1535 at the accession of the Sultan Selim II in the year 1566, at which time England had not as yet obtained any special privileges for her own subjects. It is hardly permissible to suggest that there was a discrepancy between the Turkish text and the Italian text of the Treaty of 1535, the Italian on such a supposition having been the original draft, of which the Turkish purported to be a correct translation, both having been signed, the Turkish text by the Reis Effendi, and the Italian text by Jean le Forêt, the French Envoy, inasmuch as the Diplomatic language of the Levant was at that time Italian. Such a discrepancy, however, may have been a fact, inasmuch as a conflict of versions between the Turkish text and the American text of a Treaty has been brought to light, in the case of a Treaty concluded at Constantinople so recently as on May 7, 1830, between the Porte and the United States of America. No question arose upon this Treaty before 1868, when the Turkish Authorities claimed criminal jurisdiction over two American citizens in Syria for an alleged offence against the Ottoman Government. The American Minister, Mr. E. Jay Morris, resisted this claim, and cited the Fourth Article of the American text of the Treaty of 1830, which provided that "even when American citizens may have committed an offence they shall not be arrested and put into prison by the local authorities ; but they shall be tried by their Minister or Consul, and punished according to their offence." The Ottoman Minister, however, of Foreign Affairs replied, that the American version of the Treaty was incorrect, and that the words, on which the Envoy of the United States relied, were not to be found in the Turkish text ; and such proved on a careful examination to be the fact. The United States Government ultimately agreed to abide by the Turkish version of the Treaty¹³. Unfortunately there is no Turkish version of the Treaty of 1535, so that the alleged discrepancy between the two versions of it must continue to be, as heretofore, a diplomatic perplexity. A fact, which gives some support to the authenticity of the Articles cited by Mouradjea d'Ohsson, may deserve notice, namely, that the privilege of sailing under the protection of the French flag and of trading under the protection of the French Consul, was enjoyed by the merchants of England in accordance with his version of the Articles of 1535, until Queen Elizabeth obtained for her subjects identical privileges with those enjoyed by French subjects.

¹² These Capitulations were confirmed in 1802 by Article 2 of a Treaty of Peace between the Emperor Napoleon I, and the Sultan Selim III, and still more recently in 1838 and in 1861.

¹³ Treaties and Conventions between the U.S. of America and other Powers since July 4, 1776, Revised edition, Washington Government Printing Office, 1873, pp. 1060-1069.

§ 257. The earliest Capitulations between England and the Ottoman Porte date as far back as the month of June, 1580. They are printed in Hakluyt's collection of the principal navigations and voyages of the English Nation, London, 1598, vol. xi, p. 141. It appears from other diplomatic documents of the same period, which have also been printed by Hakluyt, that in the month of March, 1579, Queen Elizabeth of England obtained from the Sultan Murad III, Imperial Letters, granting to certain of her subjects the same privileges of trading freely in the Ottoman Empire as were enjoyed by the French, the Poles, the Venetians, and the subjects of the Emperor of Germany. Further, in the same Imperial Letters, the Sultan requested, that the like liberties should be granted to his subjects and merchants to come to the Queen's dominions. Queen Elizabeth answered the Sultan's Letters in Latin, and sent his reply on Oct. 25, 1579 from Greenwich, by William Harebone, subsequently accredited to the Porte as her Ambassador. By these Letters the Queen granted to the Sultan's subjects as ample and as large liberties as had been granted to them by the King of the Romans, of France, of Poland, and the Commonwealth of Venice. Thereupon the Sultan accorded a Grant of Privileges in the month of June, 1580¹⁴, to all the subjects of Her Majesty, of which the Latin text is still extant, containing thirty-two Conditions or Articles, which, although assured to English subjects in the Ottoman dominions in 1580.

Privileges

¹⁴ In accordance with this incorporated by Charter of Grant the Turkey Company was Queen Elizabeth in 1581.

they have not been printed in the copy published by the Levant Company in 1820, are entitled to be regarded as the earliest English Capitulations. More extensive privileges were subsequently granted to the English merchants, by successive Sultans in the reigns of King James I and of King Charles I. The Capitulations, however, which are operative in the present day with some modifications, and which in that respect correspond with the French Capitulations of 1740, were accorded by the Sultan Mehemed IV to King Charles II of England in 1675; and it is recited in the preamble of these Capitulations, that the previous Capitulations had been granted to the Queen of the above-mentioned kingdom and to the Kings aforesaid through friendship. Unlike the Treaty of 1535 with France, which was in reality a Treaty of Alliance between France and the Porte, the English Capitulations are drawn up in the form of a Grant of Privileges, confirmatory of previous stipulations; and amongst these Privileges was that of the English Ambassadors being allowed, at their pleasure, to establish Consuls in the ports of Aleppo, Alexandria, Tripoli of Barbary, Tunis, Tripoli of Syria, Scio, Smyrna, and Egypt, who should decide all disputes amongst the English themselves. There was further a most favoured-nation article, in which it was recited that all the Capitulations, Privileges, and Articles, granted to the French, Venetian, and other Princes, who are in amity with the Sublime Porte, are in like manner through favour granted to the English. These Capitulations were confirmed in 1809 and in 1838, and again with modifications in 1861¹⁵.

¹⁵ The Capitulations of 1675 with certain modifications, have with the subsequent treaties of Commerce confirmatory of them, been published in a separate form by Sir E. Hertslet, C.B., the Ar-

§ 258. The Netherlands or Low Countries were the next European State that obtained Capitulations from the Ottoman Porte. The Dutch had been content to trade under the French flag and under the protection of French Consuls, until they obtained, in 1612¹⁶, from the Sultan Ahmed I, Capitulations securing to them equal rights with England and France in respect of their citizens being allowed to trade under their own flag, and to reside in the Ottoman Empire, under the protection of their own Consuls. These Capitulations were confirmed by subsequent Sultans, and were enlarged in 1680 by Sultan Mohammed IV. They contain one or two articles which stipulate for reciprocity, but there does not appear to have been any exchange of Ratifications in 1680 between the Porte and the United Provinces. They have however been recognised and confirmed in recent times by a Treaty of Commerce and Navigation of Feb. 25, 1862¹⁷.

Privileges
assured to the Dutch in 1612.

Treaties of 1675 and
1861.

§ 259. Austria, as the heir to the Treaty-Rights and Obligations of the ancient Empire of Germany, may be considered to have succeeded to the privileges which had been granted to the subjects of that Empire, prior to 1580, and which are mentioned in the recitals of the English Capitulations of that year. It is usual, however, to date the earliest Austrian Capitulations from A.D. 1615, when certain Privileges of Commerce were granted to the subjects of the Emperor. These privileges were more formally confirmed by a Treaty of Commerce concluded at Passarowitz¹⁸, between the Emperor and the Porte

Austrian Capitula-
tions of 1615.

chivist of the Foreign Office, in his Treaties and Tariffs of Trade with Turkey, 1875.

¹⁶ Schmauss, Corp. Jur. Gent. Academicum, Tom. II. p. 2266.

¹⁷ British and Foreign State Papers, vol. 52, p. 739.

¹⁸ Schmauss, Tom. II. p. 1716.
Dumont, Traité, Tom. VIII. pt. 1. p. 528.

on July 27, 1718. It is this Treaty, confirmed by subsequent treaties during the eighteenth century, which is regarded as containing the Capitulations which govern the political and commercial relations between the Porte and the Austro-Hungarian Empire of the present day, and they have been confirmed by a Treaty of Commerce and Navigation of May 22, 1862.

Prussian Capitula-
tions of 1761.

§ 260. Prussia may next be mentioned as having, in the reign of Frederick the Great, concluded a Treaty of Commerce and friendship with the Sultan Mustapha on March 22, 1761, which is drawn up in Turkish and Italian. This Treaty contains what may be called the Prussian Capitulations, which were confirmed by a Treaty of Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation, between the Porte and Prussia on March 20, 1862 (Br. and For. State Papers, LII. p. 733). The German Empire has adopted these Capitulations as well as the Capitulations of the Hanse Towns of May 28, 1839, which were confirmed by a Treaty between the Hanse Towns and the Porte on Sept. 27, 1862 (Br. and For. State Papers, LII. p. 748).

Swedish
Capitula-
tions of 1737.

§ 261. The Swedish Capitulations may be said to date from January 10, 1737, when Articles of Friendship in Turkish and Latin were drawn up between King Frederick I of Sweden and Sultan Mahmoud I. They have been confirmed by a Treaty of Commerce and Navigation of March 5, 1862.

Danish
Capitula-
tions of 1756.

The Danish Capitulations were granted by the Sultan Othman III on Oct. 14, 1756. They are drawn up in Arabic and Latin, and place Danish subjects on the same footing of privilege as the subjects of the other Treaty-Powers of Christendom. They have been confirmed by a Treaty of Commerce of March 13, 1862.

Spanish
Capitula-
tions of 1782

The Spanish Capitulations are of still more recent date, and are contained in a Treaty of Peace and Commerce concluded on Sept. 14, 1782, between King Charles III of Spain and the Sultan Abdul Hamid I. They have been confirmed by a Treaty of Commerce and Navigation concluded on March 13, 1862.

The Capitulations between Russia and the Porte date from a Treaty of Commerce concluded at Constantinople on June 10, 1783, between the Empress Catherine II of Russia and the Sultan Abdul Hamid I, although by the Convention of Ainali Kavac of March 10, 1779, explanatory of the previous Treaty of Kutchuk-Kainardji of July 21, 1774, commercial relations between the two Nationalities had been established as nearly as could be upon the basis of the Capitulations accorded to the French and to the English. The provisions of the Treaty of 1783 have been confirmed with certain modifications by a Treaty of Commerce and Navigation concluded on Jan. 22, 1862.

The kingdom of Italy has succeeded to the various privileges enumerated in the Capitulations granted by the Porte to the Venetians in 1454 and in 1718, and to the subjects of the Two Sicilies in 1740, subject to such modifications as have been made in them by the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation concluded between the kingdom of Italy and the Porte on July 10, 1861. Under the first article of the latter Treaty it is provided as follows: "All the Treaties, privileges, and immunities which have been conferred on Italian subjects and vessels by the capitulations and antecedent Treaties stipulated between Turkey and the States, which actually form the kingdom of Italy, are confirmed, with the exception of the clauses of the said Treaties and the said Capitulations, which the present Treaty is intended to modify." In virtue of this provision the kingdom of Italy succeeds to the benefits of the Treaty concluded between the Porte and the Republic of Genoa in 1665, and of the Treaties concluded between Tuscany and the Porte on May 25, 1747, and on February 12, 1833, and to the benefits of the Treaties between Sardinia and the Porte of Oct. 25, 1823, and of Sept. 2, 1839¹⁹.

Belgian Capitula-
tions of 1838.

The Belgian Capitulations are contained in a Treaty between King Leopold I and the Sultan Mahmoud II, signed at Balta Liman on August 3, 1838, and in a further Treaty also signed at Balta Liman on April 30, 1840.

Portuguese
Capitula-
tions.

The Portuguese Capitulations are contained in a Treaty of Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation concluded in London on March 20, 1843, and in a further Treaty concluded in Paris on Feb. 23, 1868.

Greek Capitulations.

The Greek Capitulations are contained in a Treaty of Commerce and Navigation signed at Kanlidja on May 27, 1855.

§ 262. In enumerating the various Treaties above mentioned I have used the term "Capitulation" in a general sense, as descriptive of the entire group of Treaties between the Porte and the Christian States of Europe, under which the privilege of national autonomy is assured to the subjects of the Christian States, whilst resident within the Ottoman Dominions. The term "Capitulation," however, is sometimes used in a narrower sense, and in such sense is technically applied to the privileges accorded either by Treaty or by Grant to the subjects of France, and of England, and of the United Provinces in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. Inasmuch, however, as those privileges have been confirmed by more recent Treaties, and the subjects of other Christian States of Europe are allowed to participate in those privileges in pursuance of the most favoured nation treatment having been assured to them by separate Conventions with the Porte, it seems reasonable to extend the use of the term "Capitulations" to the entire series of such Treaties, and on the same grounds it is permissible to include under the term "Capitulations" the Treaties in pari materia, which have been concluded between the Porte and the Principal Christian States of the New World. Amongst these may be mentioned the Articles of a Treaty concluded between the Porte and the United States of America on May 7, 1830, to which allusion has been already made, and a subsequent Treaty concluded on February 25, 1862, between the same Powers, and as regards the Southern Continent of America a Treaty concluded on February 5, 1858, between the Porte and the Empire of Brazil.

¹⁹ Aristarchi Bey quotes the text of the Tuscan and Sardinian Treaties from Martens and De Cussy, Recueil de Traités, III, IV, and V.

United States of America.
Emperor of Brasil.

I have already touched upon the meaning of the term "Capitulation." It is probably of Italian parentage, seeing that the Italian word "Capitulazioni" signifies Covenants or Agreements, and Italian was the language of Diplomacy in the Levant at the time when the Saracen and the Christian first held out to each other the olive branch of peace. But it may be doubted whether the term "Capitulations" came into use before the Treaty of 1535 between France and the Porte. Of its use shortly after the conclusion of that Treaty we have evidence in a despatch from Antoine Rançon, the French Ambassador to the Sultan Sulieman I, addressed to the Constable of France on Sept. 20, 1539, where he speaks of having in his possession "le double des articles et capitulations qu'autrefois, du vivant d'Ibrahim Pacha, le feu De la Forest avait fait et proposé." On the other hand,

Origin of the term Capitula-
tions.

in the earliest grant of privileges²⁰ accorded by the Sultan Murad III to the subjects of Queen Elizabeth of England the twenty-two articles, in which those privileges are recited, are termed "Conditions," which is the identical phrase made use of in the covenant²¹ accorded by Mahomet, the Messenger of God, to the Christians generally in the fourth year of the Hegira (A.D. 625), in which he enjoins his disciples to pay respect to the Judges of the Christians. It may be admitted that the authenticity of the Arabic text of this early privilege which is reported to have been found in the Monastery of Mount Carmel, near the Lebanon, has been impeached. Nevertheless, the document is of high antiquity, and the phrase "conditions" is in perfect harmony with the Scheme of the Koran, under which all mankind outside the House of Islam (Daru-l-Islam) are dwellers in the House of War (Daru-l-Harb), with whom a state of war (Djihad) is of perpetual obligation, except where it has been suspended by a guaranty (Aman) or by a treaty. We find accordingly that in the next most ancient document, which the Greek monks of the Holy Land have preserved as the title-deed of their privileges, and which is commonly described as the Capitulation of the Kaliph Omar²², the text of the document describes it as a pact or convention given to the patriarch

Covenant of Mahomet, the Messenger of God, A.D.
625.

Capitulations of the Kaliph
Omar, A.D.
636.

²⁰ Hakluyt, The Principal Navigations, &c. London, 1598, vol. ii. p. 137.

²¹ An English translation of this document was published by Sir Paul Rycaut in his work "On the present State of the Ottoman Empire," London, 1688. A French text of it will be found in A. de Miltitz's Manuel des Consuls, Tom. I. App. No. 1. Berlin, 1837.

²² A copy of the original text of this document is contained in a MS. in the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris, entitled "Histoire de Jérusalem et d'Hébron," fonds de St. Germain-des-Près, No. 100. A French translation of it has been published by Ubicini, Lettres sur la Turquie. 2^{me} Partie. Les Raïas. Pièces Justificatives, I.

Sophronius (otherwise Zephyrinus) on the Mount of Olives. Here again the authenticity of the document has been impugned, but its antiquity is indisputable, and it is reasonable to suppose that, if both the so-called Testament of the Prophet Mahomet (A. D. 625), and the so-called Capitulations of the Kaliph Omar (A. D. 636) are not authentic, the monks, who devised them, took care to use language in their recitals, which would not startle their contemporaries by its being at variance with Mahommedan Law, and consequently inadmissible in Mahommedan Courts. The result would seem to be, that it was not essential that the privileges, accorded to the Unbelievers who had sacred books (Kitabi), as distinguished from those who were mere idolaters (Medjous), should be in the form of an Unilateral Grant in the name of the Kaliph, but might be the subject of a treaty or bilateral compact, and the term Capitulations, if originally applied to the articles of a Treaty, came by degrees into use as descriptive of the conditions of a Grant equally as of a Treaty, where under those conditions the Unbeliever was admitted to the benefit of a truce, or a suspension of hostilities. The term "Capitulations," as already mentioned, is considered by some writers to be the equivalent of the Arabic word "Soulhh," a truce, under which the Christian was permitted to enjoy a certain autonomy. We shall probably not err in the opinion of such writers, if we employ the term as a generic term, descriptive of the entire body of grants and treaties, which constitute a kind of international code between Christendom and Islam, and which, if we date its first chapter from the privileges accorded by the Kaliph Haroun el Raschid to the subjects of the Emperor Charlemagne, it has been the work of ten centuries to complete.

Treaty of
Paris, 1856.

§ 264. It deserves to be noted that, since the Ottoman Porte has been formally admitted into the European Concert of Public Law by the Treaty of Paris of 1856, it has accorded to each of the Christian States of Europe by express Convention the most favoured nation treatment, thereby recognising a fundamental principle of the Public Law of Christendom, that all the members of the family of Nations are Peers or Equals. Further, by not requiring the renewal of Treaties at the accession of each Sultan it has accepted another principle of the same Public Law, that Treaties may be rightfully concluded in view of perpetual peace and of reciprocal benefits and obligations. It cannot well be denied that the system of Public Law, which has grown up amongst the Nations of Christendom, is a very complex system, the offspring of a community of ideas and of an identical religious faith, and that, where it rests upon unwritten custom, the foundations of that custom are to be traced in the institutions of the Roman Empire. On the other hand, between Islam and Christendom there is no common platform, even of the simplest kind, of consuetudinary law, and the foundations of the unwritten customs of Islam are to be sought for in the legends of Judaism, or in the traditions of the Arab children of the desert. Hence, although Islam has made prodigious strides since the commencement of the present century, in order to qualify herself to participate in the benefits of the European Concert of Public Law, she can only participate in those benefits, whilst the Koran continues to be the source of her civil law as well as the code of her religion, through the channel of Conventional Law. It is from this point of view, that the maintenance of the Capitulations is as indispensable to the Mahommedan as to the Christian race, if the religious abyss, which separates Islam from Christendom, is to be bridged over. There have been from the earliest times two schools of opinion amongst the authorised expounders of the Koran, like the opposite sects of Proculians and Sabinians amongst the lawyers of Imperial Rome, the one school adhering closely to the letter of the Koran, the other accommodating the letter to the changing conditions of the Empire, and guiding itself by the spirit of the Sacred Book. The great issue between the two Schools turned at one time upon the interpretation to be given to the obligation of the Holy War (Djihad) against the Unbeliever, whether the duty of waging the Djihad was confined to the defence of Islam when attacked, or was an aggressive duty against the Unbeliever under all circumstances. The strict interpretation of the Koran prevailed as long as the Mussulman was everywhere victorious through dissensions amongst the Powers of Christendom ; but larger and more liberal views have obtained the ascendant since the Treaty of 1740, when Sultan Mahmoud I undertook to bind his august successors to observe faithfully his Imperial Capitulation with King Louis XV of France and his successors. This was a great innovation upon the ancient rule of interpretation, under which all Treaties with the Unbeliever were only temporary suspensions of hostility. A far more important innovation was made in 1871 in respect of the liberty which the Koran allows to the good Mussulman to release himself from all compacts with the Unbeliever with or without notice, for upon the question whether notice is required the opinion of Mussulman lawyers is still divided. But the Porte²³ has formally acceded ²³ Gatteschi, Manuale, &c., p. xxiii.

Conference of London of 1871. to the Annex to the first protocol of the Conferences of London of Jan.—March, 1871, under which the Porte, in concert with the other Signatory Powers of the Treaty of Paris of 1856, has solemnly declared, that “it is an essential principle of the Law of Nations, that no Power can release itself from the obligations of a Treaty or modify its stipulations without the consent of the contracting parties by means of an amicable understanding.” Hence the Capitulations of the Ottoman Porte, confirmed as they have been by a long series of Treaties with the various Powers of Europe, are to be regarded as a special chapter of the Conventional Law of Europe, indispensable to Islam in order to enable her to participate in the European Concert of Public Law without doing violence to her own Religious Law. On the other hand, they afford a guaranty to the Christian States of Europe, that the Porte, having been admitted by them to the benefit of their Public Law, will not withdraw from their subjects the privilege of living under the protection of their own laws and the jurisdiction of their own magistrates, whilst they contribute to the prosperity of the Ottoman Empire by residing within a country, in which, without the Capitulations, they would, under the Lex Loci, have no title either to safety of life or to security of property. It has been well said by the Baron J. de Testa, in his Criticism of the Ottoman Memorandum of April, 1869²⁴, which declared the Capitulations to be the great obstacle to the civilisation of Islam, that the statesman, who would counsel the Ottoman Porte to seek the suppression of the Capitulations, would be guilty of signal perfidy to its true interests. The Capitulations may require modifications from time to time, but to suppress them would be to provoke a new Crusade against Islam, and to invite a violent change in the Guardianship of the Dardanelles.

* Communicated to the Representatives of the European Powers at Constantinople on behalf of the Sublime Porte.

INDEX.

- Aali Pacha, Grand Vizier of the Sultan, 110.
- Aaroun el Raschid. See Haroun.
- Abbas Pacha, successor of Mehemet Ali, 107.
- Abbot, Lord Chief Justice, his judgment that personal property has no locality, 281.
- Abdul Medjid, Sultan, organisation of the Vilayets, 93.
- Abdul Medjid, Hatti Cherif of Gul-khané, 114.
- Achean Assembly, 386.
- Ackerman, Convention of, Oct. 7, 1826, 127.
- Acquisition, derivative, 224.
- Acquisition, when the foundation of the right of property, 195.
- Actus ad omnes populos, its meaning, 359.
- Adams, President, his Message to Congress in 1827, 203.
- Adams, Hon. J. Quincy, American Secretary of State in 1824, 207.
- Adana, Pachalik of, 106.
- Addington, Mr., a British Commissioner in 1826, 201.
- Admiral, origin of the term, 288.
- Admiral, not known in England before Edw. I, 288.
- Admiralty, Black Book of the, 322.
- Admiralty, High Court of, 157.
- Admiralty Courts, their jurisdiction, 289. their procedure according to the Civil Law, 289.
- Adrianople, Treaty of, 1829, 127.
- Agent of the French Nation, under that title a member of the French mission in Spain, 312.
- Ahmed I, Sultan, his Capitulations with the Dutch, 459.
- Ainali Kavac, Convention of, in 1779, 461.
- Alexander VI, Pope, his famous Bull of anno 1493, 208.
- Alexander the Great, 446.
- Alexander, Emperor of Russia, his romantic idea of a Holy Alliance, 392.
- Alexandria, built to the westward of the Delta of the Nile, 446.
- Alexis III, Emperor of Constantinople, his Golden Bull to the Venetians, 450.
- Algerine Corsairs in the 17th century, 96. in the 19th century, 163.
- Algiers, an acquisition of the Renegade Barbarossa, 95.
- Ali Abou'l Hassan Mas'oudy, a famous Arab historian, 446.
- Alienage, as to ownership of land, in Great Britain and the United States, 421.
- Allegiance, Natural, a creature of municipal law, 274.
- Alliance, Holy, a personal league (Sept. 14, 1815), 392. its import declared at Aix-la-Chapelle (1818), 393. its history, 394.
- Alliance, Quadruple, of 1813, 72.
- Alluvion, Right of, 251.
- Alyattes, King of Lydia, 399.
- Amalphi sacked by the Pisans, 447.
- Amalphitans, their factory at Alexandria in the 9th century, 446.
- Amasis, King of Egypt, 445.
- Ambassador, his person inviolable, 365. origin of the term, 334. whether a state is bound to receive one, 336. liable to certain local Rates and Tolls, 369. entitled formerly to the ceremony of a Solemn Entry, 363. privileged from State taxation, 369. cases of arrest in itinere, 377. his right of safe conduct, 373. right of innocent passage, 376. exceptional cases, 377.
- America, United States of, Articles of Confederation of 1777 confirmed in 1778, 56. Constitution of 1778, 57. recognised by France under Treaty of Paris, Feb. 6, 1778, 20.

- Amphictyonic Confederation, 385.
 Anderson's case, Habeas Corpus refused by Court of King's Bench in Canada, 413. granted in England, but too late, 413.
 Anderson, the slave, his Extradition claimed by the United States of America for murder, 413.
 Andorra, Republic of, 44.
 Andrew's, St., Cross, 323.
 Anne, Queen, of England, 360.
 Anne, the Princess, guaranty of her succession by William III, 433.
 Antivari, Port of, annexed to Montenegro, 144, 324.
 Antonine, Emperor, his approval of the Rhodian Sea Laws, 286.
Aquæ medium flum, 295, 297, 298.
 Arabs, pastoral, 221.
 Arcifinious States, Varro's definition of them, 215.
 Argentine Confederation, its constitution in 1853, 60.
 Aristarchi Bey, his Ottoman International Law, 447.
 Aristotle, the Philosopher of Practical Life, 385.
Asidue Legationes, 351, 371.
 Asylum, pale of the, amongst the Romans, 383.
 Asylum, right of, in an Ambassador's Hotel, 367.
 Asylum to persons accused of crime in other countries, 408.
 Audience, Public, generally accorded to Ambassadors and Nuncios on their arrival, 364.
 Audience, private, of ambassadors usual at the Court of St. James, 364.
 Augereau, General, Full Powers from the First Consul Napoleon, 360.
 Augustine, St., his "Civitas Dei," 3.
 Austin on Jurisprudence, 174.
 Austria, her Capitulations with the Porte in 1615, 459.
 Balance of Power, Treaties of Utrecht, anno 1713, 187. recognised at the Congress of Vienna, anno 1815, 188. in the Treaty of Constantinople, anno 1854, 189.
 Baldus favourable to Sea Tolls, 305.
 Barbarossa, otherwise the Greek Renegade Kharaddin, 95.
 Barbary Coast, the States on the, 95. dependencies of the Ottoman Porte on the, 40.
 Barbary States, their subjects amenable to the law of blockade, 162. enjoyed the Right of Treaty, 24.
 Barbary Governments, their treaties with the European Powers, 96.
 Barbeyrac holds a positive law of Nations to be a chimera, 152.
 Bâle, City of, 181.
 Bathurst, Lord, his letter of Oct. 30, 1815, as to Treaties being put an end to by War, 441.
 Batoum ceded to Russia, 122.
 Bays of the Sea, 294.
 Belgian Capitulations with the Porte in 1838, 462.
 Belgian Provinces, object of their union to Holland, 188.
 Belgium, its neutrality, 437.
 Belle Isle, Duc de, arrested although an ambassador in itinere, 377.
 Belt, the Great, 307.
 Beni-Hafas, a dynasty of sovereigns at Tunis, 95.
 Bentham, his suggestion of the phrase "International Law," 158.
 Bessarabia, retroceded to Russia by Treaty of Berlin, 139.
 Bethlen, Gabriel, Voievode of Transylvania, 131.
 Black Sea, a Territorial Sea, 294.
 Black Sea, Convention of 1856 as to, abrogated in 1871, 181.
 Bluntchli's opinion as to narrow straits of the Sea, 299.
 Board of Trade, its notice as to German Fisheries, of December, 1874, 314.
 Bogdan, Vilayet of, identical with Moldavia, 94.
 Bojana, River, frontier of Montenegro, 144.
 Borneo, North, British Company, its maritime flag, 324.
 Bosnia and Herzegovina occupied by Austria-Hungary, upon an understanding with the Porte, 121.
 Bosniak Beys, 115.
 Boullenois adopts Huber's classification of Statutes, 265.
 Bourbon, House of, 21.
 Bourbon renunciation of the Crown of Spain, 187.
 Bray, Count de, Bavarian Envoy, 337.
 Brazil, its Treaty of 1858 with the Porte, 463.
 Bremen, Duchy of, transferred to Sweden in 1648, 254. wrested from Sweden by Denmark in 1712, 254, 434.
 Bremen, Archbishops of, 253.
 Bridge, below the first, on tidal rivers,

- Admiralty Jurisdiction prevails, 291.
- Buenos Ayres admitted into the Argentine Confederation in 1859, 60.
- Bulgaria constituted an autonomous principality, 116. its first prince, Alexander I, in 1879, 117.
- Buller, Justice, Mr., Penal Laws of Foreign States not taken notice of, 406.
- Bundesstaat distinguished from Staaten-bund, 69.
- Bynkershoek, his views as to Contract of War, 170.
- Cachet Seal of Minister of Foreign Affairs, 354.
- Calmar, Union of, in 1307, 52.
- Calvo, Charles, his Droit International, 328.
- Cambridge, University of, 157.
- Cambyse, his Conquest of Egypt, 445.
- Campbell, Lord, his view of Domicil, 277.
- Candia, Island of, 105, 106.
- Candy, King of, his Treaty with the Dutch, 401.
- Canton, Mahomedan factory at, in the ninth century, 447.
- Capitulations, meaning of the term, 451, 463. for surrender of fortresses, 438. of the Swiss Cantons to furnish troops for hire, now forbidden, 429. of the Ottoman Porte, may be modified, but not abolished, 469. of the Porte with France, in 1535, 96. English, with the Porte, 1580, 458. Dutch, with the Porte, 1612, 459.
- Capo d' Istria, Count, 113.
- Captures not to be made within cannon-shot of the Coast, 438.
- Carlovitz, Treaty of, 132.
- Carmel, Mount, the Monastery on, 464.
- Cartels for exchange of prisoners, 438.
- Cassiodorus, secretary of Theodoric the Great, 448.
- Castlereagh, Lord, British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, 392, 394.
- Catalonia, Maritime Laws of, 288.
- Ceremonial, Maritime, formerly observed with great precision, 316.
- Ceylon, Island of, 401.
- Chaco, El Gran, Indians of, 236.
- Chapel of a Legation, 37.
- Chargés d'Affaires of Moldavia and Wallachia, 352.
- Charkier Steamship, property of the Khedive of Egypt, sued in the English High Court of Admiralty, 326.
- Charlemagne, Emperor, his treaties with the Sultan Haroun al Raschid, 446, 465.
- Charles II of England, 97, 99.
- Charles V, Emperor, his expedition to Tunis, 95.
- Charleston, Port of, 273.
- Charrière, Négotiations de la France avec le Levant, 454.
- Cherif Pacha, 110.
- China, treaties with Great Britain, 401.
- Chinese treaties with European Powers, 266.
- Cicero, his Treatise de Republica, 3.
- Cinnamon trade at Ceylon, 401.
- Civitas Maxima, of Von Wolff, 148.
- Cleirac, his opinion as to the origin of a national flag on the High Seas, 322.
- Cochin, his opinion that personal property follows the Domicil, 280.
- Code Napoleon, its restrictions as to suits between Foreigners, 269.
- Collegium Fœdialium at Rome, 384.
- Comity of Nations in matters of Revenue and of Health, 311. with regard to Resident Ambassadors, 230. gives effect to Foreign Law, 264.
- Compact, the Family, of the House of Bourbon of 1761, 21.
- Confederation, Helvetic, of May 29, 1874, 55, 64.
- Confederation, Germanic, origin of, 70. its dissolution, 83.
- Confederation, North German, 84.
- Conference at Aix-la-Chapelle, its Protocol of Nov. 15, 1818, as to the Holy Alliance, 393.
- Conference at Kanlidja, July 15, 1868, respecting the Lebanon, 120.
- Conference of London, anno 1826, 204. of 1871, 468. of 1883, 246.
- Conference at Constantinople, April 22, 1873, respecting the Lebanon, 120.
- Conferences of Constantinople of 1877, 116, 121.
- Conferences of Vienna of 1855, 190.
- Congress of Aix-la-Chapelle, Nov. 21, 1818, 31, 344.
- Congress of Berlin, June 13-July 13, 1878, 115.
- Congress of Paris of 1856, respecting Montenegro, 143.

- Congress of Paris in 1856, its Declaration of Maritime Law, 172.
- Congress of Vienna, June 9, 1815, its decision as to Cracow, 38. of Aug. 12, 1815, recognises the neutrality of Switzerland, 64. of 1815, no Ottoman minister attended it, 90. Declaration as to the Free Navigation of Rivers, 91, 173, 245. classification of Diplomatic Agents, 344. of 1815, as to reception of Diplomatic Agents, 363.
- Conrad II, Emperor, his Charter, Dec. 10, 1038 of the Stade Tolls, 253.
- Consolato del Mare, 159, 287, 378.
- Consulates, Public, their institution in Foreign Countries, 378.
- Consules Maria, described in the Consolato del Mare, 289.
- Consuls, various grades of, 380. Commercial not political agents, 350. their status in the Levant, exceptional, 379. in the Barbary States, 98. of France, exercise jurisdiction over French vessels in foreign ports under Treaty, 405.
- Contiguity, right of, notion of the Roman Jurists, 214.
- Contraband of War, agreement in 1797 between Russia and Great Britain, 169. limitation of, 400. practice of Nations, 171. a Common Law of Nations according to Bynkershoek, 170.
- Convention of Feb. 9, 1776, as to the Vistula, 250. of Constantinople, March 10, 1779, 133. of San Lorenzo el Real, of 1795, 233, 235. of St. Petersburg, Oct. 13, 1795, as to Poland, 37. of 1801, between Russia and Great Britain, 168. Third Article as to Contraband of War, 169.
- Convention of Reichenbach, June 15, 1813, between Great Britain, Russia, and Prussia, 429. of Paris, April 23, 1814, as to Balance of Power, 188. of Moss, for the Union of Norway with Sweden, Aug. 14, 1814, 52. of Paris as to the Ionian Islands, Nov. 5, 1815, 35, 325. of London, Sept. 26, 1816, as to the Ionian Islands, 36. of Ackerman, Oct. 7, 1826, 127, 133. of Mayence, March 31, 1831, as to the navigation of the Rhine, 245. of Kutaya, May 5, 1833, between Egypt and Turkey, 106. of August 2, 1839, with France as to Channel Fisheries, 313. not operative in French Waters, 314. of London, July 13, 1841, as to the Dardanelles, 160. of Dresden, Aug. 30, 1843, for regulating the Elbe Tolls, 255. of Balta Liman, May 1, 1849, 134. of Paris, 1856, special, as to Black Sea, 181. abrogated in 1871, 181. of Aug. 19, 1858, between Moldavia and Walachia, 137. of Turin, March 22, 1862, 46. of Great Britain with Tunis, July 19, 1874. 100. of June 4, 1878, as to Cyprus, 123.
- Conventions, transitory, perpetual in their nature, 226, 418. for the hire of mercenary troops, forbidden under the Swiss Constitution, 429.
- Conventions of 1801 and of 1807, between the United States and Great Britain, 298.
- Coran, the, its application to Christian dependencies, 94.
- Couza, Alexander, Prince, Hospodar of the Danubian Principalities, 138.
- Cracow, Free City of, 37, 428.
- Cracow, suppression of the Free City in 1846, 40.
- Cross, Red, the general device granted by the Holy See to the Crusaders, 322.
- Customs, the, of the Sea, 290.
- Cyprus, Island of, Treaty of Alliance between Great Britain and the Porte, 121. assigned by Turkey to be occupied and administered by England, 123.
- D'Aguesseau, Chancellor, 158.
- D'Angeberg's Congrès de Vienne, 394.
- Daniel I, Vladika of Montenegro, his Code of Laws, 142.
- Danish Capitulations with the Porte in 1756, 460.
- Danube, Vilayet of the, 93. St. George's mouth, 239. River, under Treaty of Paris and of Vienna, 241. Riverain Commission of the, 242. European Commission of the, created in 1856, 241; prolonged for ten years in 1871, 244; powers further extended in 1878, 246; prolonged in 1883 for twenty-one years, 246; powers extended up to Galatz, 247; further extension up to Ibraila, 248. Mixed Commission of the, created in 1883, 248. Act of Navigation of, Nov. 7, 1857, modified on March 8, 1866, 243, 247.

- Danac, under the protection of Prussia, 427.
- Dardanelles, Straits of the, free navigation by merchant vessels, 308. guardianship of the, 469.
- Daru-l-Islam, distinguished from the Daru-l-Harb, 464.
- D'Ayrest, Secretary of State to Queen Anne of England, 360.
- Declaratory Articles of a Treaty, 173.
- Defender of the Faith, Title conferred by the Pope on the Kings of England, 347.
- De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gallison's Reports, p. 400, 289.
- Deserters, Extradition of, 409.
- Desūk, a village on Rosetta arm of the Nile, formerly Naucratis, 445.
- Diet of the Germanic Confederation, its international functions, 76. its ordinary assembly, 77. its Full Chapter, 79.
- Diplomacy, a Science, not merely an Art, 163.
- Diplomatic Science, founded by Leibnitz, 166.
- Diplomatic Law of Nations, 151.
- Diplomatic Agents, three classes established at the Congress of Vienna, 344. of second class, 348; of third class, 349; of fourth class, 350. ceremonial of their reception, 363.
- Diplomatie, Traité Complet de, 166.
- Discovery, act of, gives an inchoate title, 197. notification of, presumes an intention to occupy, 205. must be notified to other nations in order to found a title to territory, 198.
- Djihad, a Holy War against Christians, 467.
- Dobroutcha, territory south of, assigned to Roumania, 140.
- Domicil, the criterion of national character, 275.
- Domicil of origin, distinguished from Domicil of choice, 281.
- Dreyer, De inhumano jure naufragii, 449.
- Droit de Renvoi, 408.
- Dunkirk not to be forfeited under the Treaty of Paris, 1763, 180.
- Edict of the States General, anno 1679, as to ambassadors, 374.
- Edward I, ordinance as to Jura Corona, 297.
- Eflak, Vilayet of, identical with Walachia, 94.
- Egypt, Special Tanzimat for, 109.
- Egypt, conquered by the Ottomans in 1517, 105.
- Egypt, settlement of, by the Treaty of London of 1840, 106. Mixed Tribunals introduced into, 110.
- Elgin, Earl of, a détenu in France, although an ambassador in itinere, 377.
- Elizabeth, of England, concludes a treaty with the Porte in 1580, 457.
- Elizabeth, Queen, her answer to the Spanish Ambassador, Mendoza, 208.
- Elsinore, Tolls of the Sound, 307.
- Embassadors, 339.
- Emigrants, who abandon their native country sine animo reverendi, 275.
- Empire, Roman, of the Germans dissolved in 1801, 24. a primary territorial right, 230. Right of, distinct from Right of Property, 231.
- England, her supremacy over the British Channel, 321.
- England, King of, entitled Defender of the Faith, 347.
- Enguarantus Dominus de Caury, earliest Admiral of France, 288.
- Ensign, Red, carried by all British merchant vessels, 324.
- Eudemon of Nicomedia, 286.
- Exequatur requisite for a Consul, 380.
- Exmouth, Lord, 97.
- Ex-Territoriality, privilege of, 271. of an ambassador, 366.
- Extradition of political offenders, exceptional, 410. Royal Commission on, 417.
- Eyre, Lord Chief Justice, 278.
- Factories, Christian, in the Levant, 267. Greek, in Egypt, 445.
- Family Compact of the House of Bourbon, Aug. 15, 1761, 397. renounced by the National Assembly of France in 1790, 398.
- Fetial College at Rome, 384.
- Fetial Law, 157.
- Field, Dudley, his Outlines of an International Code, 299.
- Finch, Sir John, English Ambassador to the Porte, 98.
- Fiore, Pasquale, Professor, his Trattato di Diritto Internazionale Pubblico, 329.
- Firman of the Sultan as to Tunis, Oct. 23, 1871, 100.
- Firman of Khidev of Egypt, 1867, in favour of Ismail Pacha, 100. of Aug. 2, 1879, in favour of Tewfik Pacha, 112.

- Firman of the Sultan as to Egypt, June 1, 1841, 107. May 27, 1865, 108. May 2, 1866, 108. June 8, 1867, 109. June 8, 1873, 109.
- Firman of Sultan Ahmed I to Les Religieux de Jérusalem in 1604, 332.
- Fisheries in the North Sea, 301.
- Fishery, limits of national right, to three miles from the coast, 313.
- Flag of Jerusalem, 330. House Flag of the Latin Convents, 332.
- Flag, the Five Cross, 330. mercantile, of Samos, 326. mercantile, of Moldo-Walachian Principalities, 326. mercantile, of Egypt, 326. mercantile, of Montenegro, 144. mercantile, of Moldavia and Walachia, 134. mercantile, of the Free Cities of Germany, 326. mercantile, of Sweden different from Norway, 53. mercantile, of Switzerland, 327. mercantile, of Ionian Islands, 35. the mercantile, that of a company or a guild, 321. House, at the discretion of the Shipowner, 324. of Egypt identical with that of the Ottoman Porte, 112. salute of the, on the High Seas, 317.
- Flags of merchant vessels strictly regulated, 319.
- Florence, Republic of, its Egyptian Capitulations in 1488, 452.
- Florida ceded to the United States, 234.
- Floridas, the, ceded by Spain to the United States of America in 1800, 59.
- Fœlix, Traité du Droit International, 269, 283. his opinion as to the refusal of French tribunals to entertain suits between foreigners, 270.
- Fontenac, M., Governor of Canada in 1637, 213.
- Foreigners out of the pale of the Jus Civile in ancient Rome, 334. may not sue one another before a French tribunal, 269.
- Forêt, Jean le, French Ambassador to the Porte, 455.
- Forum delicti, 407.
- Forum rei sitæ, 278.
- France, King of, entitled the Most Christian King, 347.
- Francis I of France, declaration of war against Emperor Charles V by reason of murder of his Ambassadors, 376. his treaty with the Sultan Soleiman II in 1535, 453.
- Frederic I, Emperor, Charter of May 7, 1189, 253.
- Frederick IV of Denmark, married with the left hand, 356.
- Free Cities of Germany had a mercantile, but not a military flag, 326.
- French Revolution of 1789, put an end to the Treaties of Utrecht, 188.
- Fugitive Slaves, Extradition of, 409.
- Fugitives from Justice, early treaties between Conterminous States, 416.
- Galatz, Consul at, 137. under the Jurisdiction of the European Commission of the Danube, 244.
- Gallatin, Mr., Plenipotentiary of the United States in 1826, 202.
- Gatteschi, Manuale di Diritto Ottomano, 447, 452.
- Gavillot, J. C. Aristide, Les Capitulations et la Réforme Judiciaire en Egypte, 452.
- Geneva, Republic of, 10.
- Genoa, her supremacy over the Ligurian Sea, 321.
- Genoese community at Constantinople in the thirteenth century, 450. their privileges in 1453, 451.
- Gentilis, Albericus, his treatise De Jure Belli, 156.
- George's, St., Channel, neutrality of, 302.
- George's, St., Cross, ensign of the Kings of England, 322.
- German Empire of 1871, its formation, 83, 84. its constitution, 85.
- German, North, Government, its ordinance as to fisheries within three miles of her German Coasts, 315.
- Germanic Empire dissolved in 1806, 24.
- Germanic Confederation, agreed upon by Treaty of Paris, May 30, 1814, 72. Final Act of, May 15, 1820, 73. its dissolution, 83. its consent required for the cession of a portion of the Duchy of Luxemburg, 82.
- Gesammstaat, Prussian, 50.
- Ghuri-El, Sultan, the last Mameluke Sultan of Egypt, 453.
- Glückstadt Toll, 256.
- Goderich, Mr., British Envoy, 337.
- Godolphin, on the Admiralty Jurisdiction, 288.
- Gothland, merchants of, 449.
- Grotius, his definition of a State, 4. his theory of Consuetudinary Law, 147.
- Guaranty, treaties of, 431. of Duchy of Schleswig, 434. of the Pragmatic Sanction of the Emperor Charles VI, 432.

- Guardacostas, Spanish, for Revenue purposes, 310.
 Guilds of Shipowners in Imperial Rome, 321.
 Gulikhané, Hatti Cherif of, 114.
- Hakluyt's Voyages, Edition of, 1598, 457, 464.
 Hamburg, exempted from Stade Tolls by Charter of Frederic I, May 7, 1189, 253.
 Hammer, von, Baron, his History of the Ottoman Empire, 455.
 Hardenberg, Prince, 392, 394.
 Haroun al Raschid, Sultan, his treaties with the Emperor Charlemagne, 446, 465.
 Hatti Cherif of the Sultan, Feb. 12, 1841, 107. of June, 1879, deposing the Khedive Ismail, 111. of Gulikhané, 114.
 Hatti-Houmaïoun of 1856, 116.
 Heath, Mr. Justice, his judgment in Ogden v. Saunders, 279.
 Hedjaz, the, renounced by Mehemet Ali, 106.
 Helvetic Confederation of 1815, 64.
 Henry III, Emperor, Charter May 13, 1040, 253.
 Herodotus, his visit to Egypt, 445.
 Hertlet, Sir E., his Treaties and Tariffs with Turkey, 459.
 High Seas, the highway of Nations, 290.
 Histoire de Jérusalem et d'Hébron, MS. in la Bibliothèque Nationale, 464.
 Hobbes, his idea of a Nation, 11. de Civitate, 151.
 Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, Prince Charles Louis, invested Oct. 23, 1866 as Charles I of Roumania, 138.
 Holstein and Lauenberg, Duchies, surrendered by the King of Denmark, 50.
 Holy Places at Jerusalem under the protection of France, 446, 454.
 Horn, Andrew, Chamberlain of London, 297.
 Hospodar of Moldavia, 132.
 Hovering Acts of Great Britain, 309.
 Huber, his three maxims as to the effect to be given to Foreign Laws, 261.
 Hudson's Bay Company, incorporated by King Charles II, 213.
 Hungary, Crown of, Act of Settlement, 49.
 Hungary, the King of, his title of the Apostolic King, 347.
- Huningen not to be fortified under the Treaty of Paris, 1815, 181.
 Huskisson, Mr., a British Commissioner in 1826, 201.
- Ibrahim Pacha, Governor of Candia, anno 1827, 105. nominated Vall of Egypt before his father's death, anno 1848, 107.
 Ikaria, Bishop of, 114.
 Independence, fundamental element of a Nation, 9. of certain States, conventional, 26.
 Indian Title, resting on occupancy, according to Chancellor Kent, 220. according to Chief Justice Marshall, 222.
 Instructions of a Diplomatic Agent may be kept secret, 360, 362.
 International Law, phrase introduced by Mr. Bentham, 158.
 International Morality, supplemental to International Law, 176.
 Internuncio, Austrian, at Constantinople, 348.
 Inviati or Ablegati, Latin designation of Envoys, 349.
 Inviolability, personal, of an Ambassador, 367.
 Ionian Islands, under a British Protectorate Nov. 5, 1815, 103. sovereignty renounced by Special Act of Ottoman Porte, April 24, 1819, 36, 104. Protectorate renounced by Great Britain, anno 1863, 37. united to Greece and declared neutral territory by Treaty of London, Nov. 14, 1863, 37. their mercantile flag, 35, 325.
 Iphigenia, legend of, 444.
 Iron Gates of the Danube, 244, 245.
 Islam, its unwritten Customs, whence derived, 466.
 Isle of Serpents, 139, 245.
 Ismail Pacha, created Khedive of Egypt, June 8, 1867, 109. abdicated the Khedivate of Egypt, anno 1879, 112.
 Italian Capitulations with the Porte of 1740, 461.
- Jahde, the Bay of, rarely frozen over, 33.
 Janissaries, destruction of, in 1826, 90.
 Japan, Swiss Envoy to, 329.
 Japanese Treaties with European Powers, 267.

- Jerusalem, Latin Kings of, 448. le Prieur de, 330. Holy Places at, 454. Flag, 455.
- Jerusalem Knights of St. John at Tripoli, 96.
- John, Don of Austria, 96.
- Judge-Consul, his office first introduced at Barcelona in 1270, 378.
- Judge-Conservator, established in Portugal under Treaty of 1654, 268. in Portugal, abolished in 1842 by Treaty, 403.
- Jura Corona, in the time of King Edward I of England, 297.
- Jura littoria, lighthouses and sea-beacons, 304.
- Jurisdictional waters of a nation, 293.
- Jus Gentium of the Romans, 269.
- Jus inter Gentes, 150, 230.
- Jus Naturale, of the Roman Jurists, 154.
- Jus Possessionis, 202. distinguished from Jus Possidendi, 228.
- Jus Possidendi, 193.
- Kait Bey, the last but one of the Mameluke Sultans of Egypt, 452.
- Kaliphate, when acquired by the Ottoman Sultans, 453.
- Kara George, Voivod of Servia, 126.
- Kayson Kehagasi, the Agent of Governors of Provinces in the Ottoman Empire, 353.
- Kent, Chancellor, on judicial decisions of Prize Tribunals, 156. his view of the Law of Nations, 176. his definition of the Indian title of Occupancy, 220. on the territorial character of Laws, 259.
- Kiel in Holstein, declared to be an Imperial Military harbour of Germany, 33.
- Kilia branch of the Danube, 139.
- Kitabi, sacred books, 465.
- Knights Hospitallers of Jerusalem, 446.
- Kniphäusen, Lordship of, 30.
- Kosova, battle of, June 15, 1389, 126.
- Kutschuk-Kainardji, Treaty of, July 10, 1774, 132.
- Lago Maggiore, Swiss flag on steam boats, 329.
- Laurence, William Beach, his edition of Wheaton's Elements of International Law, 173.
- Law of Treaty, alone binding on Mohammedan States, 89.
- Layard, Sir A. H., British Ambassador at the Porte, 123.
- Leach, Sir John, his judgment in Sutton v. Sutton, 421.
- Leagues, Personal or Real, 388. unequal, Vattel's division of them, 387. amongst States of the same Religion, 385. do not presuppose a State of War, 391.
- Lebanon, under a Christian Vali since 1861, 119. Conference at Kanlidja, 1868, 120. Conference at Constantinople, 1873, 120.
- Leck, River, a continuation of the Rhine, 245.
- Legationes assidue, not in use in the time of Grotius, 351, 371.
- Legatus or Orator, the ancient title of an Envoy, 334, 399.
- Leibnitz, his Codex Diplomaticus the foundation of the Diplomatic Science, 166.
- Leopold, Prince, of Saxe-Coburg, his refusal of the Crown of Greece, 113.
- Lesseps, Ferdinand de, obtains a Charter for piercing the Isthmus of Suez, 107.
- Letters of Recommendation supplied to Foreign Envoys, 356.
- Letters of Credence expire on demise of the Chief of either State, 358.
- Lettre de Chancellerie, 355.
- Lettre de Cabinet, 354.
- Lettres de Cachet, 354.
- Lex loci contractus determines the validity of a foreign contract, 265.
- Lex Fori determines the remedy for breach of a foreign contract, 265.
- Limburg, Duchy of, real union with Holland, 51.
- Litteræ Credentiales, 353.
- Lorenzo, San, el Real, Treaty for the free navigation of the Mississippi, 233.
- Loughborough, Lord, his judgment that personal property has no locality, 280. as to Penal laws being local, 400.
- Louis XIII of France, his Treaty with Algiers, 96.
- Louis XV, his Treaty with the Ottoman Porte, 467.
- Louisiana, ceded by France to the United States of America in 1803, 59.
- Louisiana, Western Boundary of, 205, 209, 216.
- Luxemburg, Grand Duchy of, personal Union with Holland, 51.
- Luxemburg, Duchy of, portions ceded to Belgium in exchange for portions of Limburg with consent of the Germanic Confederation, 77, 82.

- Lymoon Pass, between Hong Kong and China, 298.
- Madison, his observations on Treaties, 165.
- Mahmoud I, Sultan, treaty with France of a permanent character, anno 1740, 467.
- Mahmoud II, Sultan, his Empire not represented at the Congress of Vienna, 90. division of his Empire into Vilayets, 93. division of Bulgaria and of Roumelia, 113, 115.
- Mahomet, the Messenger of God, his Covenant with the Christians, 464.
- Mahomet II, his grant of privileges to the Genoese in 1453, and to the Venetians in 1454, 451.
- Mahommedan Nations only recognise the Law of Treaty, 163. excepted from the usages of Christendom, 161.
- Mahommedan World, its relation to Christendom, 383.
- Mahommedan Factory at Constantinople under the Christian Emperors, 449.
- Mali, Angelo, Cardinal, 3.
- Malta, Knights of, at Tunis, 95.
- Mameluke Beys, Masters of Egypt, 105. annihilated March 1, 1811, by Mehemet Ali, 105.
- Mandate, of Full Powers to negotiate a Special Convention, 358.
- Mandatum Procuratorium ad hoc, 358.
- Mangalia, 140.
- Maria Theresa, the Empress, 250.
- Marin, Storia Civile del Commercio de' Veneziani, 450.
- Marino, San, Republic of, 46.
- Maris, Capitaneus, before 1272, 288.
- Maritime Convention of 1801, between Russia and Great Britain, 168.
- Maritime Law, Declaration of Paris, of 1856, 92, 173.
- Maritime Territory, 293.
- Marshall, Chief Justice, his view of the Indian Title, 222. his judgment in the Schooner "Exchange," 272. judgment as to Penal Laws being local, 406.
- Martens, F. de, his Traité de Droit International, 300.
- Massawah, Kaimakamate of, granted to Ismail Pacha, 108.
- Mediterranean Pass, 97.
- Medjous idolaters, 465.
- Mehemet Ali, Pacha of Egypt in 1841, 104.
- Mehemet IV, Sultan, his treaty with King Charles II in 1675, 458.
- Mendoza, Spanish Ambassador, in London, 208.
- Mentone ceded to France in 1860, 30.
- Merlin, his objection to Mixed Statutes as a classification, 264.
- Message du Conseil Fédéral de la Suisse, 329.
- Metternich, Prince, 392, 394.
- Midhat Pacha, his proposed Reforms in 1864, 93.
- Milan Obrénovitch, Prince of Servia, 129. King of Servia, 130.
- Miletus, its Treaty of Commerce with Alyattes King of Lydia, 399.
- Milosch, Prince of Servia, 127.
- Minister, as a distinct class from Ambassador, 343.
- Minister ad interim, 349.
- Ministers, Public, three classes, 340.
- Ministers, Resident, introduced at the Congress of Aix-la-Chapelle (1818), 344.
- Mississippi River, discovery of it, 207. Islands at the entrance of it, 215. navigation of the River, 233, 236.
- Mohammed IV, Sultan, Capitulations with the Dutch in 1680, 459.
- Moldavia, the prey of adventurers in the seventeenth century, 132.
- Molesworth, Lord, his account of Denmark, 256.
- Molloy, his account of the Barbary Powers, 99.
- Monaco, a Protected Independent State in 1641, 28. incorporated into the French Republic in 1792, 28. ceded by Sardinia to France in 1860, 30.
- Monaco, Prince of, his treaty with the King of Sardinia in 1817, 428.
- Monroe and Pinckney, Commissioners of United States, 209.
- Monson, Admiral, 97.
- Montenegro or Tzernegóra, called by the Ottomans Karadagh, 140.
- Montenegro, its condition as settled at the Congress of Paris, 1856, 143. its Independence recognised at the Congress of Berlin, 1878, 144. mercantile flag of, 325.
- Monti, Marquis de, arrested, although an Ambassador in itinere, 377.
- Morality, International, supplemental to International Law, 176.
- Morganatic Marriages, 356.
- Morocco, kingdom of, 162.
- Morris, E. Jay, American Minister to the Porte in 1868, 456.
- Mouradjea d'Othson, his Treaties of the Ottoman Empire, 454, 455, 456.

- Murad III, Sultan, grants privileges to British merchants in 1580, 457, 464.
- Mutawakkil, the last of the Abasside Caliphs, 453.
- Nagasaki, Port of, 329.
- Napoleon I, his treaty of 1802 with the Porte, 455.
- Nations, primary and secondary rights of, 178.
- Naturalisation Act, 33 Vict. ch. 14 (1870), 338.
- Naucratis, on the Canopic branch of the Nile, 445, 446.
- Navarre, kingdom of, 18.
- Navicularii, guilds of shipowners, under the Roman Empire, 321.
- Necho, Pharaoh, king of Egypt, 445.
- Nero, saying of a German Chief in the time of, 217.
- Netherlands, kingdom of, division in 1831, 18.
- Netze, River, ceded to Prussia, 238, 239, 240.
- Neuchatel, Principality of, 10, 18.
- Neumann, Recueil des Traités et Conventions, 442.
- Neutrality, Treaties of, 437.
- Neutrality, Armed, of the Baltic Powers, 168.
- Neutrality of jurisdictional waters, 302.
- Neutrality of the Seven Islands on their Union with Greece, 37. of Switzerland, 64.
- Non-Christian Powers, their exceptional relations, 161.
- Non-Ratification of a treaty, not a breach of the Law of Nations, 363.
- North-German Confederation, 84.
- Norway, Union with Sweden, 53, 54.
- Novibazar, Sandjak of, 120.
- Nowgorod, Factory at, in thirteenth century, 449.
- Nubar Pacha, an Armenian Christian, 110.
- Obrénovitch, Milan, Prince of Servia, July 2, 1868, 128.
- Occupation, primitive acquisition, 195. right of, 196.
- Oder, River, ceded to Sweden, 238.
- Oldenburg, the Duke of, assumed the title of Grand Duke May 22, 1829, 82.
- Omar, the Khaliph, his Capitulation granted to the Patriarch Zephyrinus, 465.
- Ompeda, Von, Baron, his distinction between absolute and modified Natural Law, 155.
- Ordinance of Charles V of France as to the Maritime Flag, of Dec. 7, 1373, 322.
- Oregon Question, 213.
- Ortolan, Diplomatie de la Mer, 167.
- Ostrogoths, Kingdom of, in Italy, 448.
- Ottoman Porte, its integrity essential to the Balance of Power in Europe, 190. its ancient rule as to the Closure of the Dardanelles, 161, 190.
- Oxford, University of, 157.
- Papal Nuncio, his place amongst Ambassadors, 346.
- Papal division of the New World between Castile and Portugal, 198.
- Paraguay, Republic of, 236.
- Pardessus, Lois Maritimes, 449.
- Parker, Chief Justice, territorial character of the laws of a State, 259.
- Partidas, Las Siete, a collection of Castilian Laws, 288.
- Peace of a Nation, offence against the, in tidal rivers, 291.
- Peace of Bucharest, May 28, 1812, 127, 367. of Munster, Jan. 30, 1648, 233. of Osnabruck, Sept. 8, 1648, 254. of Paris of 1856, 116. of San Stefano, 93, 120, 121, 139. of Sitvatorok, Dec. 11, 1606, 131. of Stettin, anno 1570, 52. of Utrecht, 360.
- Perels, F., his Seerecht der Gegenwart, 300.
- Peronne, Convention of, Sept. 14, 1641, 28.
- Perseus, King, 386.
- Personal Suite of an Ambassador distinct from Official Suite, 368.
- Petrovich, family of, Vladikas of Montenegro, 141.
- Phillip the Bold of France, 288.
- Phillimore, Sir Robert, his treatise on Domicil, 277. on Conventions of Guaranty, 435.
- Piracy on the High Seas, 274.
- Pirates justiciable everywhere, 291.
- Pisa, Republic of, its treaty with Sultan Saladin of Egypt in 1173, 447.
- Poglizza, Republic of, 43.
- Poland, King of, entitled the Orthodox King, 347.
- Poland, Kingdom of, broken up, 18. attached to the Kingdom of Saxony in 1809, 38.
- Pontes infra primos, 291.

- Porte, Ottoman, its adherence to the first protocol of the Conferences of London of 1871, 468.
- Portugal, the King of, entitled the Most Faithful King, 347. her supremacy over the Ligurian Sea, 321. her National Ensign, 322.
- Portuguese Capitulations with the Porte in 1883, 462.
- Possession, legal, how acquired, 194, 204.
- Possession of territory uninterrupted for a certain time founds a good title, 211.
- Pouvoirs Généraux, 359.
- Powers, General Full, actus ad omnes populos, 359.
- Pozzo di Borgo, Count, Russian Envoy, 337.
- Prætor Peregrinus, at Rome, 269.
- Pragmatic Sanction of Charles II, 433.
- Prescription preferred to Usucaption by Vattel, 212.
- Prince Regent, his note respecting the Holy Alliance, 396.
- Principalities, Danubian, Convention of, Aug. 19, 1858, 137.
- Private International Jurisprudence, 266.
- Privateers disallowed by Treaty, 400.
- Proculians and Sabinians, legal Schools at Rome, 467.
- Protocol of Feb. 20, 1830 as to Samos, 114.
- Prussia, her Rhenish Provinces, 224. her Capitulations with the Porte in 1761, 460.
- Pruth, the River, 139, 239.
- Puffendorf, his special merit, 5. identity of natural law of States with that of individuals, 151.
- Pyramids, Battle of the, July 21, 1798, 105.
- Quarantine, British, Statute of, 26 Geo. II., later Statute of, 5 Geo. IV. c. 78, 309.
- Race, pale of the, amongst the Greeks, 383.
- Railways in Egypt, 107.
- Rakoczy, Voievode of Transylvania, 131.
- Rançon, Antoine, French Ambassador to the Sultan Suleiman I, 463.
- Raresch, Prince of Moldavia, 130.
- Ratification, provision as to, ex majori cautela, 361. of a treaty indispensable according to Bynkershoek, 362. of a treaty may be refused, 439. instances of such refusal, 440. sometimes not to be waited for, 440.
- Rayneval, De, his Institutes of Law of Nations, 175.
- Redchid Pacha, author of the Hatti Cherif of Gulkhané, 114.
- Reddie, his Enquiries in International Law, 165.
- Renaudot, Eusebius, 447.
- Renvoi, Droit de, 408.
- Republietta la, of Andorre, 46.
- Residence, the foundation of Jurisdiction, 260.
- Resident missions in accordance with Comity, 351.
- Residents distinct from Envoys, not furnished with Letters of Credence, 341.
- Revenue, British Zone of four leagues, 309. American Zone of the same distance, 310.
- Rhine, subject to the Condominium of four Electors of Germany, 252.
- Rhine, the navigation of the, under the Final Act of Congress of Vienna of 1820, 245. under the Convention of Mayence of 1831, 245.
- Rhine, Confederation of the, July 12, 1806, 10, 31. guaranteed by Prussia under Treaty of Tilsit, July 7, 1807, 20.
- Rhodian Laws of the Sea, 286.
- Rias Pacha, 110.
- Right of Asylum in an Ambassador's Hotel, 367.
- Right of Coalition for self-defence 14, 186. of Condominium over the Rhine, 252. of Emigration, 274. of Exclusive Use, 234. of Fishery in the Open Sea, 311. of Indemnity, 13. of Innocent Use, an imperfect right, 423. of Occupancy, of native Indian, 220. of Property and Domain, 192. of Security, 13. of Self-defence, 12. of Self-preservation entails the right of possessing, 191. of Territorial Inviolability, 184. of Way across the territory of a Nation, 423.
- Rights of Nations, perfect and imperfect, 12. primary and secondary, 178.
- River, discovery of the mouth, gives a right of occupancy of the whole country drained by it, 203.
- Rivers, territorial Empire over them, 232. great arterial, of Europe, 246.
- Rivers, Navigation of, Congress of

- Vienna, 146. Treaty of Paris of 1856, 147.
- Roccambruna ceded to France, 30.
- Rodenburg adopts Huber's three classes of Statutes, 264.
- Roe, Sir Thomas, 97.
- Roman view of the Jus Gentium, 150.
- Rooles or Jugemens d'Oleron, 159, 287.
- Roumania, State of, 138. declared itself independent June 3, 1867, recognised by Peace of San Stefano in 1878, 139.
- Roumelia, Eastern, administrative autonomy under a Christian Vali, 118.
- Roumelia, Serraskier of, 452.
- Royal Honours, States entitled to them, 346.
- Rush, Mr., Minister Plenipotentiary in London in 1824 for U. S., 207.
- Russian Capitulations with the Porte of 1783, 461.
- Rutherford, his view of Treaties and Conventions, 168.
- Rycaut, Sir Paul, on the present State of the Ottoman Empire, 464.
- Safe Conduct of an Ambassador, 373.
- Edict of States General, anno 1679, 374.
- Saganlough, 122.
- Said Pacha granted a Charter in 1856 for the Suez Canal, 107. laid down railways to Cairo, 107.
- Saladin, Sultan of Egypt, 447.
- Salisbury, Marquis of, his despatch May 30, 1878, to Sir A. H. Layard, 123. his despatch of July 7 to M. Waddington, French Minister of Foreign Affairs, 124.
- Salisbury, John of, 3.
- Saltire, Red, of Ireland, 323.
- Salute of ships of war by merchant vessels, 318. of fortresses and of guardships by ships of war, 320.
- Samos, a Sandjak of the Vilayet of the Isles, 113. submitted to the Porte in 1835, 113. its mercantile flag, 326.
- Sancta corpora legatorum, 365.
- Sancti habentur legati, 335.
- Sardinia, Treaty of Subsidy with Great Britain, 430.
- Sarnen, the League of, in 1832, 65.
- Sauli, della Colonia dei Genovesi in Galata, 451.
- Savigny, on the Positive Law of Nations, 161. on Possession, 192.
- Scheldt, navigation of the river, 233.
- Schmalz, Privy Councillor, 166.
- Sea, Open, nullius territorium, 285. customs of the, 290. laws, 287. presumption against exclusive rights over the, 296. prescriptive right to parts of the, 295.
- Sea-Letter, or Certificate of Nationality, 321.
- Seals, three, of the British Foreign Secretary of State, 355.
- Selim, the last Independent Prince of Algiers, 95.
- Selim I, the first Ottoman Sultan of Egypt, 105, 453.
- Selim II, Sultan, his Treaty of 1566 with France, 455.
- Semi-Sovereign States, the term introduced by J. J. Moser, objected to by Wheaton, 25.
- Semonville, M., French Envoy, 337.
- Senior Nassau, his definition of International Law, 176.
- Serenissima Republica, title of Venice and of Genoa, 347.
- Servia lost her independence in 1389, 126. recovered it in 1878, 129.
- Servia, Principality of, declares war against Turkey, June 22, 1876, 129.
- Servitude of Public Law, 423.
- Settlement of a Nation, 196.
- Ship, Public, of a State, its extraterritorial character, 272.
- Sitvatorok, Peace of, 131.
- Society, Natural, of Nations, 149.
- Soleiman I, supports Barbarossa, 95. the Magnificent, 130.
- Somerset the Black, Judgment in the Court of King's Bench in 1772, 273.
- Somme, La, or Miroir des Justices, 297.
- Sonderbund, the, in 1846, 66.
- Sovereignty, personal as distinguished from territorial, 260.
- Soudan, trade of, passes through Suakim, 108.
- Soulh, Arabic term for a truce with Christians, 451, 465.
- Sound Dues, formerly levied by Denmark, 305. acknowledged in numerous treaties of thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, 306. redeemed by the maritime nations of Europe, 307.
- Spain, New, ancient kingdom of, 10.
- Spain, king of, entitled the Most Catholic King, 347.
- Spanish Capitulations with the Porte in 1782, 460.
- Spanish Succession, War of, 171.

- Spelman, Sir Henry, 288.
- Spencer, Chief Justice, Penal Laws do not operate beyond the State, 406.
- Staaten-Bund, distinguished from Bundestaat, 87.
- Staaten-Reich, classification of the new German Empire, 87.
- Stade, County of, annexed to the Archbishopric of Bremen, 253.
- Stade or Brunshausen Toll, on the River Elbe, 253.
- Stade Toll, transferred to Hanover in 1719, 254. suppressed in 1861, 256.
- Stary-Stamboul, embouchure of, 139.
- State, definition of a, by Grotius, 4. by Puffendorf, 5. by Vattel, 6. identity of a, in respect of real Treaties, 21.
- States, Protected under Treaties, and Independent, 27. Protected and Dependent in India, 27. Semi-Sovereign, 28. how nationalised, 9.
- States, Neyron's division of, into those of the First Order and those of the Second, 25. nationality of, merged in a Federal Union, 23. union of, Personal or Real, 48.
- Statuta suo clauduntur territorio, 266.
- Statute of 36 & 37 Vict. ch. 60 as to Extradition, amending 33 & 34 Vict. ch. 52, 416.
- Statutes divided into personal, real, and mixed, 263.
- Stefano, San. Peace of, in 1878, 93, 120, 121, 139.
- Stettin, Peace of, anno 1570, 52.
- Story, Mr. Justice, his work on the Conflict of Laws, 263. his division of the Law of Nations, 150. mid-channel of narrow straits of the sea, 298. as to the Comity of Nations in matters of Foreign Law, 262. his opinion that personal property follows the Domicil, 280.
- Stowell, Lord, his view of the Law of Nations, 159. in relation to the Mahommedan world, 162. his view of the International Status of Mahommedan Powers, 89. his judgment as to islands at the mouth of the Mississippi, 215.
- Straits of the Sea, 294. midchannel divides the jurisdiction over narrow, 300.
- Suakim, Kaimakamate of, granted to Ismail Pacha, 108.
- Subject of a State, may be refused as a Foreign Minister, 339.
- Subsidy, Convention of, supplementary to a Military Convention, 436. Treaties of, 428.
- Sub Spe Rati, acceptance of overtures, 361.
- Suez Canal, Firman granted in 1856, 107.
- Suite, official, of an Ambassador, 368.
- Suleyman, his letter to Francis I of France, Sept. 1528, 331.
- Sulina branch of the Danube, 239.
- Suum cuique, principle of, 153.
- Sweden, Union with Norway in 1815, 53.
- Swedish Capitulations with the Porte in 1737, 460.
- Swedish Revenue Zone disapproved by Lord Stowell, 310.
- Swiss Confederation of 1648, 63. Act of Mediation imposed by First Consul Napoleon in 1803, 63.
- Swiss Cantons, now prohibited to supply troops for hire to foreign nations, 429.
- Swiss vessels on the Italian lakes, 329.
- Switzerland, its neutrality, 437. its present Constitution of May 29, 1874, 66. has adhered to the Declaration of Paris of 1856, 330. decision of National Council as to a Maritime Flag, 330.
- Syrp, Vilayet of, identical with Servia, 94.
- Tanzimat of Gulkhand, 109.
- Tédaret Effectif, 112.
- Tenterden, Lord, his judgment in De la Vega v. Viana, 279.
- Terrae intra fauces, 293.
- Territorial inviolability, right of, 184.
- Territorial Seas, 294.
- Territory of a Nation, 228.
- Territory, Maritime, of a Nation, 293.
- Testa, Baron J. de, Recueil des Traités de la Porte Ottomane, 331. his criticism on the Capitulations, 468.
- Tewfik Pacha, substituted for Ismail Pacha as Khedive of Egypt in 1879, 111.
- Texas, admission into the Federal Union by resolution of Congress, 19. received into the Union of North American States in 1844, 59.
- Thalweg of a River, boundary between opposite Riverain States, 216, 249.
- Thomasius, Christian, criteria of occupation, 200.
- Title by Conquest, 222.

Titles of Courtesy of Great Republics and Confederations, 347.

Titles of a religious character conferred by the Pope on the kings of Europe, 347.

Toll, maritime, in respect of light-houses, 304.

Tougra of the Padichah, or Tugra, 104, 451.

Toultcha, Sandjak of, ceded by Russia to Roumania, 139.

Towers, Seven, formerly a prison for Foreign Ambassadors at Constantinople, 367. abolished in 1827, 367.

Treaties, Chinese, with Europeans, 266. Japanese, with Europeans, 267. Ottoman, expired on death of each Sultan, 452. between France and the Ottoman Porte between 1535 and 1740, 389. of Utrecht, anno 1713, as to balance of Power, 187. between England and Denmark (anno 1400 and anno 1523) as to the North Sea Fisheries, 301. their relation to the general Law of Nations, 164. favourable or odious provisions of, 390. personal and real, 21. put an end to by subsequent war, 420, 440. custom to renew them after a war, 441. creating a Servitude of Public Law, 424. of Extradition, 402. of Guaranty, 431. of Navigation and Commerce, origin of, 399. of Neutrality, 437. of Armed Neutrality, 438. of Subsidiy, 428. of Unequal Alliance, 426. of Protection, Roman notion of them, 427. of Boundary not terminated by a war, 421. of cession or of boundary, 226. of Cession, when operative, 439.

Treaty-Law, alone binding on Mohammedan States, 89.

Treaty of Guaranty distinguishable from a Treaty of Alliance, 435.

Treaty, for suppression of Slave Trade in 1841, not ratified by France, 440. of 1830, between United States and the Porte, disputed text of it, 456. between Great Britain and Hesse-Darmstadt (Oct. 5, 1793), 429. as to Consular Jurisdiction, between England and China (July 29, 1843), 404. Ibid., between England and Japan (Aug. 20, 1858), 404. between France and the United States of America as to Consular Jurisdiction over vessels and their crews (Feb. 23, 1853), 405. with China

(July 22, 1843), 266. with Japan (Aug. 26, 1858), 267. with Portugal (anno 1654), as to Judge-Conservator of the British Nation, 268. of 1740, between France and the Porte, 467. between Holland and the King of Candy (Feb. 14, 1766), 401. of St. Petersburg (Jan. 11, 1857) as to special powers of Consuls, between France and Russia, 403. of Washington, or Ashburton Treaty, between Great Britain and the United States (Aug. 9, 1842), as to Extradition of Anderson, 412. between Great Britain and the United States of America (Nov. 19, 1794), 419, 437. between Nicaragua and Great Britain, of 1859, 440. of Utrecht, renewed after every war, 441. of Zurich (Nov. 10, 1859), modified confirmation of previous Treaties, 441. of Paris (March 30, 1856), provision as to renewal of previous Treaties of Commerce, 441. Dutch, with the Porte in 1612, 459. of Adrianople (Sept. 14, 1829), 127, 133, 239. of Amiens (1803), 34. of Aix-la-Chapelle (anno 1748), 180. of Argovie (Sept. 17, 1808), 250. of Barrier (Jan. 30, 1713), 436. of Berlin (June 8, 1825), as to Kniphausen, 31, 32. of Berlin (July 20, 1853), as to the Jahde, 32. of Berlin, (July 13, 1878), 116, 129, 244, 324. of Bucharest (May 28, 1812), 133. of Campo Formio (Oct. 17, 1797), 30. of Carlovitz (anno 1699), 132, 141. of Casr-Said (May 12, 1881), 101, 102, of Constantinople (March 21, 1800), 33. of Constantinople (March 12, 1854), between France and Great Britain on the one hand, and the Ottoman Porte on the other, 189. of Gastein (Aug. 14, 1865), 50. of Ghent, in 1814, 235. of Gottorp (June 26, 1715), 434. of Hanover (June 22, 1861), for suppression of the Stade Toll, 256. of Houmon-Schai (Oct. 8, 1843), 401. of Kanlidja (May 27, 1855), 462. of Kiel (Jan. 14, 1814), 52. of Kutschuk-Kainardji (July 10, 1774), 132, 352, 461. of London (May 7, 1832), 437. of London (April 19, 1839), respecting Luxemburg, 77, 82. of London (July 15, 1840), as to Egypt, 104, 106. of London (July 3, 1842), 403. of London (Feb. 13, 1843), for the extradition of fugitives from justice, 414. of London (July 13, 1841), as

- to the Dardanelles, 308. of London (March 13, 1871), as to closure of the Straits, 309. of London (May 8, 1852), as to the German Duchies of the King of Denmark, 189. of London (May 28, 1852), between France and England for extradition of criminals not ratified by the British Parliament, 416. of London (March 10, 1883), as to the Danube, 246. of London (Nov. 14, 1863), as to the Ionian Islands, 37. of Luneville (Feb. 9, 1801), 30, 181. of Marseilles (March 24, 1619), 96. Methuen (Dec. 27, 1703), 401. of Oliva (anno 1660), 187. of Osnabruck (Oct. 24, 1648), 238. of Paris (Aug. 15, 1761), known as the Family Compact, 397. of Paris (anno 1763), 180. of Paris (Feb. 6, 1778), 10, 20. of Paris (Sept. 17, 1783), 235. of San Lorenzo el Real (anno 1795), 235. of Paris (May 30, 1814), 29, 35, 72. of Paris (Nov. 20, 1814), 29. of Paris (March 30, 1856), 94, 125, 128, 241, 466. of Paris (Feb. 2, 1861), 30. of Passarowitz (anno 1718), 141, 340. of Peronne (Sept. 14, 1641), 28. of Prague (Aug. 23, 1866), 50, 83. of Presburg (Dec. 26, 1805), 31. of San Stefano (March 3, 1878), 93, 129. of St. Germain en Lay (March 29, 1670), 238. of St. Petersburg (Jan. 29, 1834), 134. of Sistoia (Aug. 4, 1791), 126, 141. of Spire, (anno 1544), as to the Sound Dues, 306. of Stockholm (anno 1720), 435. of Tilsit (July 7, 1807), 20, 34, 427. of Turin (Nov. 7, 1817), 29, 428. of Turin (March 24, 1860), 30. of Utrecht (anno 1713), 180, 433. of Versailles (Sept. 3, 1783), 10. of Vienna (March 16, 1731), 301. of Vienna (March 10, 1734), 425. of Vienna (Oct. 14, 1809), 38. of Vienna (May 3, 1815), 38, 82. of Vienna (Oct. 30, 1864), 50. of Warsaw (Sept. 18, 1773), 238. of Washington (June 5, 1854), 234. of Westphalia (anno 1713), 9, 11. between Chili and the United States of America (May 16, 1832), 401. between China and United States of America (July 3, 1844), 405. between the United States and Chili as to foreign merchants (May 16, 1832), 401.
- Trebizonde, 122.
- Tripoli under a Beylerbey, 96.
- Tripoli a Vilayet of the Ottoman Empire, 95.
- Tunis under the dynasty of Benihafas, 95. Regency under Mohammed Sadyk Bey, his Convention with Great Britain in 1874, 100.
- Tunis, Protocol of Constantinople (Feb. 24, 1873), 100. Treaty of Casr-Said (May 12, 1881), 101. under a French Protectorate, 102. under Sidi Ali (Oct. 28, 1882), 103.
- Turkey Company incorporated in 1581, 457.
- Twiss, Oregon Question, 441. on the relations of the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein to the Crown of Denmark, 435.
- Tyrian merchants in Egypt, 444.
- Tzernoievich, family of, rulers of Montenegro, 140.
- Tzetenie, capital of Montenegro, 141.
- Union of States, Personal or Real, 48.
- Union, Federal, varieties of, 55.
- Union, personal, of States, its true character, 54.
- Union Flag, when adopted for British Ships, 323.
- United States of America, its treaties with the Porte, 463.
- United States' Constitution of 1787 as to Fugitive Slaves, 409.
- Use, innocent, of territorial waters, 295.
- Usucaption, Wolff's definition of it, 212.
- Valais, Republic of the, 10, 18.
- Vattel, his definition of the Law of Nations, 6. his theory of the Jus Voluntarium, 148. his conception of the Judge of the Place, 270. his view of the territorial title of Savages, 221. justifies the right of Emigration, 274.
- Venetians, their Treaties with the Greek Empire, 450. their Treaty of 1454 with the Porte, 451.
- Venice, her supremacy over the Adriatic Sea, 321.
- Vilayets of the Ottoman Empire, introduced by Sultan Mahmoud II, 93. existing organisation of, established by Sultan Abdul Medjid, 93. of Trebizonde, Erzeroum, and Van, ceded to Russia in 1878, 93.
- Visigoths in Spain, 448.
- Vladika of Montenegro, 140.

- West. River, 145.
 War of the Spanish Succession, 171.
 War of Great Britain against France and Spain in 1755, 209.
 Warrington, Mr. Justice, 422.
 Waters, Jurisdictional, 293. of a neutral nation are inviolable, 303.
 Wexler, Treaty of the Treaty, Peace of 24.
 Whiston, his objection to Vattel's division of the Law of Nations, 150. his view of Treaties and Conventions, 154. his views on Custom and War modified in the sixth edition of his Elements, 173. his view of the international status of the Mohammedan world, 90.
 Whiston's Interpretation of the Convention of 1801, 171.
 Whiston, imprisoned by the Dutch for 1700, through the Resident of the Dutch at Lureburg, 341.
 Whiston, Earl of 1739.
 Wm. M. Attorney General of the United States of America, his opinion as to the surrender of fugitives from justice (Nov. 20, 1821), 412.
 Wisby, merchants of, 449.
 Wisby Water-Recht, 287.
 Wlad, the last independent Prince of Walachia, 130.
 Wolff, Von, Christian, his definition of the Law of Nations, 5. his theory of the Jus Voluntarium, as distinguished from Customary Law, 147. his theory of a Civitas Maxima, 148.
 Wyborg, Tolls on the Great Belt, 307.
 Yacht, Royal Squadron entitled to use the White Ensign, 323.
 Zepolya, Jena, 130.
 Zephyrius, the Patriarch of Jerusalem, 465.
 Zee, territorial, of the high seas, 291.
 Zouch, Dr. Richard, his treatise on Fetal Law, 157.

THE END.

3 2044 050 769 462

AUG 4 1971

DUE NOV 26 1970

DUE MAR 7 1979

~~DUE NOV 2 36~~

~~DUE NOV 8 1955~~

~~DUE APR 28 47~~

